THE PERSONALITY OF OUR SHOP SHINES THROUGH OUR ADS

When you read our ads you can see a shop laden with the beautiful things that make a house, a HOME, and persons pursuing their HOBBIES are full of delight at the items they find! We know this to be the fact from our wide correspondence . . . and those who come to see us . . . waiting for the day when they can come and talk to us . . . and see for themselves! It is a rewarding business that makes friends like these all over our land! And you can write us any time. We answer every letter that is physically possible!

Another Unusual DOUBLE STUDENT LAMP
with old 10" YELLOW RIBBED OVERLAY Shades. Beading on the traditional acorn fonts . . .
flame finial . . . this is a wonderful Christmas Gift . . . for the person you like best! $225.

RARE INDEED! To find a HORN OF PLENTY LAMP
in a Bright Lively BLUE Font
$55

The base is milk glass . . . and it is seldom indeed to find an unusual whale oil lamp . . . in color these days. The lamp is 12" tall the font long and straightish.
If you wish it wired and shaded that is extra.

PINK SATIN GLASS PEG LAMP
Shaded.

Both the font and the shade are matching in color. The shade is swirled with a ruffled top . . .
and they fit into a fine old brass candle-stick-peg. 18" hi. . . .
chimney $80. Charming and colorful and lovely . . . Christmas Worthy!

24" Diam. Steel Plaque from China!

Three Wild Animals in Fighting Postures . . . hand hammered in relief! Thin Frame of Picture.
The fur on the animals are actually visible hair by hair . . . only the eyes in gold and the teeth in bright steel and the tongue in gold are highlighted! Signed on the face! Indescribable by my poor pen!

in alternating floral panels . .
terra cotta, greens, deep blue . .
in finest detail—$10.

An Extremely Unusual
Original Astral Lamp Base

Reeded . . . 24" tall!
FITTED WITH A SILK SHADE
it will stand about 36" hi. Persons who have 18th century homes and who want more light than an original lamp will throw like the silk shade and a large three way bulb. The base is two step and brass . . . the original font also brass adds to the beauty. Only $95 complete.

PORCELAIN AND POTTERY MARKS

Identifying pottery doesn't have to be confusing. It can be simple as ABC.

"Porcelain & Pottery Marks" is a new book for collectors that takes all the guesswork out of identification. Here you'll find only the important European and American marks that the collector and dealer must know.

Published by Urban Hartman, well known New York antique dealer, it's a "must" for all collectors.

P. O. Box 1097

Providence, Rhode Island

Beautiful old brass apothecary scales, in perfect condition. This is a very heavy pair with a T arm that measures 9 1/2" across, and is all cut out in lacy openwork. The marinet shaped indicator is exquisitely designed, and there is a heavy shaped arm that holds the pan on one side, while chains support the saucer shaped holder on the other. The pine base is 16 by 8 1/2" and perfectly finished, and the brass upright is very heavy and 17 inches tall. The size is especially lovely for decorative purposes. This is an English piece about 1840. It's all hand polished and simply lovely! Price ..... $36.00

A very handsome old dower chest on legs all beautifully hand dovetailed with old heart shaped hand wrought handles, and handsome early hand wrought iron latch. There are indications that this one was made at sea, the workmanship is meticulous and on the hinged cover is a great big heart worked out in brass studs. Only once before have we ever seen one with this design. It's 24" long, 11 1/2" deep and 9" tall and its top is 19" from the floor, has cute square pegged through legs — it's a perfect chair side stand, and it will hold a lot of things. Price $24.50

Handsome old porcelain slipper with elaborate decoration, and a very low, very shaped baby French heel. Colors are lovely, pink and blue, and applied gold, forgetmenots. Piece dates about 1860. It measures 7" long. Price ..... $8.00

Group of highly colored old tin toys about 4 1/2" long mounted on tiny wheels. These are circus animals, — a dancing bear and his trainer, a lion and his trainer, a billy goat with amusing very long whiskers and horns, and a prancing gray horse. These are pull toys, early ones and in excellent condition. Price, ea. .... $2.50

Beautiful early pine cabinet for some lucky little girl. This is an antique miniature of the cupboards that our great grandmothers used. Two panelled doors above, and two below, shaped sides and a working level of 21" by 13" between.

Words cannot describe the charm of this piece, either as a gift for some child for her to keep her whole life through, or as a receptacle for miniature treasures belonging to an adult. It's 37" tall overall, and it's 21" wide, stands on short square legs, all refinished and it's adorable. Price ..... $62.00

A little white doll's chest with a decal of roses on drawer fronts and a framed mirror above. Measures 8" tall and it's 7 1/4" across the front. The mirror adds another 4" to height. It's cute! Price ..... $3.00

A rare early French comb for a ladies' hair. Outstanding workmanship. French gift with forgetmenots, the comb real tortoise shell. Packed in the original shaped leather box, a real collector's item. Price ..... $15.00

Highly colored child's picture book, dated 1892. This is an A.B.C. book filled with highly colored illustrations of animals and an Alice In Wonderland little girl. Wonderful condition. Price $2.00

A blown green Christmas tree light, a hanging one, and very early and rare. Price ..... $4.00

A blue pottery hanging salt box with a shaped back and a hole for hanging. The back rises above the hinged pine cover, and the word "salt" is on the front. Wonderful condition. Price $7.50

An extremely small old pull sled, the seat is only 20" long, but it's as solid as the day it was made, for a very little child. It's painted bright red, black and green, and is it cute! Price ..... $8.00

Rare old amberina salt shaker with original top, melon ribbed, baby thumb print inverted, fuschia color, perfect. Price ..... $14.00

Magnificent flint lock pistol marked W. Kottland and Co. and on top London. Lots of brass trim, original ram rod, superb condition. This was made about 1750-1760 — a beautiful thing! Price ..... $55.00

28. RARE 18th century TURKISH PRIMING FLASK, BRASS, lovely incised design, 4" long. DON'T fail to add this one to your collection. Similar one in Rilling's Flask Book—$25.
29. PIANO STOOL, mahogany finish, especially nice bulbous fluted legs—good rough—$8.50.
30. 50 yr old HAND CROCHETED BED SPREAD, POPCORN pattern, fringe on 3 sides, cream color, EXCELLENT condition. 2 1/2x3 1/2 yds. I'd hate to sit down & make this for $48—wouldn't you?
31. MILK GLASS PONT for hanging lamp, 3" diam. base, marked "ATHEHOLT & CO. N. Y. & Phila."—1/3 in diamond quilted pattern, ground in yellow & peachy pink (almost Burmese colors) & painted spray morning glory buds in white, pink, & green. Slight scratches in color. 4 1/2" tall—$8.
32. OLD COSMOG miniature lamp base with chimney (no shade)—good color—$4.
33. Another hanging PONT. MILK GLASS, 2 bands diamond quilting, also Burmese coloring with BIG YELLOW ROSE, red berries, green leaves, 3" diam. base. 5" tall—$9.50.
34. ACORN PATTERN, "Lee Ea. Amer. 125"—5" diam COVERED GLASS BOX (pewder?) Frosted ground with high embossed design in the clear, acorn finial. 8" tall. Unique in this pattern—$6.
35. QWTV lamp BASE (no shade). BIG ONE. 18" tall, 9" diam. Iron foot can stand rebrassing. Dark green & yellow ground with BIG GRAPES in blues & purples, (looks like transfer under glass)—$6.
36. 6" diam. round glass dome on wood base, 10" tall overall, which holds a COUPLE of STUFFED CANARIES, good condition—$12.
37. MUCH LARGER ONE, might say MAMMOTH! 16" diam. with base 19" tall. This holds a rather dilapidated floral arrangement. Real wicker basket with WAX flowers and preserved butterflies—DOME AND BASE WORTH PRICE OF $25.
38. MATCHED PAIR all BRASS OVAL FRAMES, metal backs, convex glass in "em. Openings 14x20". Good shape—$15 pr.
39. PAIR of STEEL (no brass) old AUTO OIL LIGHTS "Edmunds & Jones Corp. Detroit Mich."—$8 pr.
40. SINGLE STEEL old AUTO SIDE LIGHT (no brass), red glass in side, "Corcoran Co. Cincinnati, Ohio." Small corrosion hole in base—$3.
41. This side light (single), steel with BRASS rim, "Deltis Otto Driving Lamp, N.Y. Pat. 1906-08"—$9.50.
- OR $18 for lot of four!
42. ORNATE SNUFFER TRAY (no snuffer), silverplated on copper, silver almost all worn off. Nice floral applied border, & engraved centre. 9 1/2" long—2 bucks.
43. Another, earlier, also silver on copper, needs resilvering, centre slightly dented, same price.
44. And a VERY EARLY TOLE ONE, plain, 4 1/2x9 1/2", with HAND WROUGHT steel "scissors" snuffers—$8. Tray needs a little de-rusting.
45. OVAL frosted clear glass bowl, "MAPLE LEAF" pattern, this is the FROSTED one. NICE!—$6.50.
46. CUSTARD GLASS TUMBLER with sort of winged "shield" pattern, gold a bit worn $4.
47. DAMAGED Continental porcelain figure, blonde lady in purple flowing robes standing in centre of 2 baskets (flower holders), blue ribbons on handles & BIG flowers, petals of one damaged & small nick on rim one basket. I'm sure some one can repair this beautifully. LOVELY colors, about 8" across, 8 1/2" high—$6.50.

48. OLD fine quality china coffee pot (not iron-stone), with sprays of small MOSS ROSES, PINK EDOINGS, rope & clear finial, bits of gold, some slightly worn gold. 2 VERY tiny flakes on lid rim—$8.
49. OLD, IMPORTANT, and STUNNING little COCOON CLOISONNE INK WELL, Gilt Bronze acorns & leaves adorn the fancy base. Hinged lid & ORIGINAL glass ink container. Base 4 1/2" across, 2 3/4" high overall. Stands on 4 TINY gilt bronze legs. FINEST QUALITY—$16.
50. INTERESTING POTTERY MUG, dark red ground with varicolored glazed colors "dripped" on. Front has 2 ELEPHANTS in light brown in HIGH RELIEF. Tip of one trunk nicked, & IVORY tusk tips nicked. Mark is a white seal APPLIED on it with a blue "scarab", on side near handle. 5" tall—$4.
51. OLD PANCAKE DISH, medium blue all over SPATTER, glaze cracked & underneath discolored, but BARELY shows through. Bit of old sponging on edges. $4.
52. BEAUTIFUL OLD covered VEGETABLE DISH—this is an interesting SPLASHY SPATTER in FLOW BLUE. Glaze crazing in lid only, not very noticeable among the color. Nice bulbous & scalloped shape—$12.
53. IT'S PANCAKE WEATHER!—keep 'em seaming—we've got the dishes for them! Yep! another pancake dish, marked "Sevres" with fleur-de-lis—AMERICAN of course; transfer of blackberries & their bloom, nice colors, gold edged. 3 fake INNER FLANGE don't show—the pancakes won't mind them—$4.
54. & 55. In time for your THANKSGIVING Turkey! PAIR STAFFORDSHIRE PLATTERS, (sold separately) — unless you've got 2 turkey BEAUTIES! Black & white enamel, with eagles, goats, Centaurs, & other slightly bowdlered folk. Marked "W. R. & CO. TYROLEAN". 17 and 15" respectively. Pattern SLIGHTLY blurred in one. No. 54 is $15—No. 55 is $10.
56. Group of FIVE OLD BOTTLES, reading from left to right—4 1/2" light aqua embossed hearts & words "Hart's Delicat. Troy, N.Y. Strove Polish"—$1.50. 6" dark green "Gargling Oil, Lockport, N. Y."—$1.50. 10" Dark Amber "Paine's Celery Compound" flask on rim—$3. 9" Amber 2 mld. "W.T. & CO 871", possibly Bay Rum bottle—$1.50. 11 1/2" VERY EARLY BLOWN, pale green, full of interesting tear drops & deeply indented base—no markings—$2.
57. Cast Iron WELLY PULLEY, about 12" diam. Surface rust—$1.
58. HANDSOME DEEP WALNUT FRAME with wide gold liner, couple minor soil spots, edges RUSTIC CARVED, opening 10x12", 14 1/2" overall—$6.
59. HEAVY BRASS tower jardiniere to hang! Cast Brass handle, tip of base finial broken off (no consequence)—I can live without a base finial, can't you? Little crack in base, NOT burnished, 6" diam. 7" deep—$4.
60. SOFT PASTE, 9 1/4" DARK BLUE plate, feels & looks like SALOPIAN, floral border. CAMEL & driver centre. Very minor glaze scratches—should not deter you from owning this at $5.50.
51. 11 1/2" Dark Blue "MR. SYNTAX READING HIS TOUR"—NOT the earliest one—not the newest—$8.
- 7 1/2" DARK BLUE "HALL'S QUADRUPLED" plate—$8.
63. DAMAGED FEWTER coffee pot, marked "B. Manning's Pat. 1862, Warranboro". Mentioned in Kirtland's, not as fine Fewter, but at least an example. Spout split near tip, radroomed border at rim, acorn finial. Rinned "seam" near base started to melt sometime. Interior surface rust & couple rust stains on outside—$5 as is!
64. Also DAMAGED FEWTER pot, marked "Taunton Brita Mfg. Co."—refer K-7 foot fig. 325. Wood handle & finial. Spout seam leaks, short seam split in top rim. Needs good elbow grease to clean it up—$11.
65. 21" tall EARLY BRASS CANDLESTICK with BEAUTIFUL clear ETCHED HURRICANE SHADE, which has CRANBERRY edge, Bobche pierced for prisms. Brass stick shows this was used plenty, little bumps here and there—but SO OLD, one accepts defects. I know stores that sell things in PRISTINE condition—if that's what you want, don't order from Harpin's!—HE SELLS NOTHING BUT USED THINGS!—stuff his grandmother had!—let's get back to the point! The Hurricane business is $18.

- For gracious living let's serve a PLANKED STEAK in the Victorian manner. Thick plank with gauged well and tree. Inevitable, unimportant split at wedged end. Manning Bowman plated tray is 16"x10", not including handles. Has pierced gallery sides, and little button feet. Ready to use $15.00
- Have a set of SEVEN of these light blue, 9 3/4", WASHINGTON VASE plates. Incised "Pearl Stone Ware, PW & Co." Pristine condition $28.00
- Whether you like it or not, this is a beautiful bowl! 9" diam. 3 1/2" deep. Orange-iridescent inside, with sparkling raised beaded star design; outside is clear to fiery-opalescent, with buttons, daisy, and fan designs. Tiniest under-edge nick. Almost un-seeable $7.50
- Cutest old rolling pin you ever did see, 15" long, including maple handles. Yellow pottery center, 8" long, 3 1/4" diam. $6.00
- Looks like a primitive-pine footstool. Isn't it? It isn't. It's walnut. And it is OLD. But don't buy it if you want it perfect; it's rough. Needs paint removed, and the top is split. But, grace it has. 17x8", 8 1/2" tall $6.50
- Red-clay, pottery umbrella stand, 21 1/2" tall. Painted and moulded to resemble a tree trunk. Rustic, and old $3.00

7. Perfect, concave, milk-glass plate, 12" diam. Painted grapes are slightly worn, but interesting $7.00

8. and 9. came to me together, and apparently were brother and sister dolls, although I believe "Brother" started life as a girl because "he" has a row of curls at the back, while sister has ringlets all over her head. HE is 13" tall, has a cloth body and brown kid arms and hands. SHE would be about 19" tall to the tips of her little high heels, if the patent leather hadn't deteriorated; has quaint shaped cloth body and hand made clothes. Papier-mache head is attached to long bust line and back with pretty shoulders. STAMPED with face and "Trade Mark" in diamond. Both have been dropped on their noses many times, and they're far from perfect, but someone will wash their faces and love them for $18.00

10. and 11. are GOLF TROPHIES for the year 1908. No. 10 is 7" tall, 4 1/4" diam. gold-washed bowl, scalloped top. Beautifully engraved all over bowl and foot. "Forbes Silver

17. Light blue scenic platter, 15 1/2"x12". "Belvoir". J. H. One edge point is rubber, and there is a tiny bit of yellowed mold imperfection. $12.00

10. English biscuit jar, 6 1/2" tall, and 7" diam. plate. "Psyche, Ridgways, Stoke-on-Trent." Ribbed background with brown, blue, and yellow butterflies; brown floral sprays $8.00

19. 9 1/2" tall OWL clock, iron with good bronzed finish. Glass eyes. Has standard back and alarm attachment, but it's independent, runs when it wants to. $15.00

20. Almost time to carve, so why not do it with atmosphere and this early STAG HANDLED carving set, silver ferrules. Knife is 14" long, fork is 10 1/2" $8.50

21. Pressed glass (don't know the pattern) two-piece punch bowl with six matching cups. All perfect, 9 1/2" tall, 12" diam. top. Whoops, as I went to measure it I discovered a crack in the pedestal base, but bowl is O.K. - So $8.00

22. Even un-musical I can admire the craftsmanship that went into the making of this MANDOLIN. And it has never been abused. Laminated ROSEWOOD body, joined with ivory strips; edges and playing surface minutely inlaid with ivory, abalone, pearl, and tortoise shell. A handsome instrument, and a costly one originally. But now only $35.00

23. Hand-fashioned pan, 20" diam., 6 1/2" deep, from solid heavy copper. Not polished $15.00

24. Covered MILK-WHITE "MAINE", 7 3/4". One pin-point nick on bottom $8.00

25. White WEDDING FAN with CARVED and PIERCED IVORY sticks, 10 1/2" long. Hand-painted pink flowers, and blue forget-me-nots. Excellent condition $15.00

26. This should be the eighth Wonder, such carving! I was told that it hung behind the Clerk's desk in an old Hostelry. The books were for the room keys, and the pockets below, for mail. Sherlock Holmes would deduce that they only had ten rooms, and expected just fire of the guests to receive mail. No joking, if you like carving, you'll love this. It is 46" at its widest, 36" tall. Completely hand-wrought from TWO mahogany boards, each 2 1/2" WIDE, and 8" THICK. Only the small roll at the top is applied, and the designs at each end are of acorns and leaves. Tremendous deep pockets (one thickness of wood), the center one is 7 1/2" deep; are DRAPE carved. A Decorator's dream; there was never another like this. One repaired split at the upper left scallop, the only imperfection $38.00

27. Oval frames, 12 1/2"x11", painted black. Convex glass, and narrow gold rims frame really old photographs. Great-grand-folks $8.00

28. Rare, large compote in BULL'S EYE VARIET, Lee Pl. 47. 8" tall, 8 1/4" diam. Brilliant glass. PROOF $20.00

29. Rugged, beautifully carved chair. Structurally perfect, and the tapestry is usable as is. Don't know the wood because it is covered up with a nice rosewood graining which is ideal and should be left that way. Much detailed carving, Acanthus scrolls, flowers, etc. And the crest has two DOLPHINS holding a CROWN. Just place it in the right spot and admire. 46" tall $42.00

30. And this 41" tall, QUEEN ANNE is in such good condition that there may be a question of antiquity, but IT IS OLD, and I call it mahogany. It came to me with No. 28, from the same beautiful home where it was never abused. Has a slip-seat and Spanish foot. You date it $48.00

31. Pair of nice little maple outsize chairs. Original cane seats fine. Just the old finish to remove. $14.00

32. And this dainty little pair have their original rush seats. BUT, painted $18.00

33. You find the strangest things in the strangest places. Now, here's a 12" diam. all-brass, Chinese or Japanese, I don't know the difference; song, with its 14" mallet. Engraved designs of Lady, parasol, buildings, fish, etc. $8.50

34. And did I have fun putting four photos together to make one bed post. But, what a BED. The deepest carved Acanthus leaves and Pineapples I have ever seen. The carved foot posts are of mahogany, and the turned head posts are of lighter wood, perhaps maple; but completely authentic. 91" tall, including tremendous 6" brass caster-cups. No re-finishing to do, just set it up, get a spring and mattress; it has the angle irons; but no tester. Oh yes, the head-board is one piece, 18 3/4" wide, gracefully scrolled, mahogany. $175.00

No C.O.D.'s Crating free, all shipping extra. Items will be sent express collect for the transportation. Or, if extra is included for preferred parcel post, we will promptly return any surplus. Original photos 20c ea.

Co. USA Quad. 1019." $6. No. 11 is a handsome pitcher, 7 1/2" to the thumb-rest; especially graceful with square base. "Pairpoint Mfr. Co. New Bedford, Mass. Quad. 382 2" Remove the engraving and you have an heirloom Wedding present $8.00

12. Dark blue Historical plate, 9" diam. Clews. "Landing of Gen. Lafayette." Three minor edge glaze flakes, and a 1 3/4" hair-line on the back. Even so $15.00

13. This lovely deep blue platter is unbelievably perfect considering the date the maker R. HALL worked, 1818. "ROSETTE." 17 1/2"x14" $22.00

14. Have a set of eight of these tea cups and saucers in a dainty small size, but only four pictured. Nice china, not marked. White with gold rims and garlands of pink roses. All perfect $12.00

15. Group of SLIPPERS. A. A darling grey-blue china, 3 1/2" long; stippled background; high relief molded leaves and berries; bird with raised wing. $4. B. A silver-plated pin-cushion; silver slightly worn; cushion shredded. $1.50. C. Frosted Giltender, not marked. 5 1/2" long. $4.50. D. Cunning 4" pair, hand-hewn and carved wood $3.00

16. We'll give you this torso, the trunk of which is 8" long; and charge you for the lovely, lovely 5" bisque head; incised "G. & S. 3, Germany." Unusual teeth are recessed in the open mouth, and her brown eyes have real lashes, but lids need re-waxing if you must have perfection. No wig $10.00

"THE CHICAGO LINCOLN"

"The Chicago Lincoln," Dr. Avar Fairbanks' statue of the sixteenth president, is scheduled to be installed on October 20, in Chicago in a triangle section formed by the intersection of Lincoln, Lawrence and western Avenues. Many Lincoln scholars are on the guest invitation list, including: Governor William G. Stratton of Springfield; Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago; Dr. and Mrs. Fairbanks; Carl Sandburg, the famous poet and Lincoln authority; Ralph Newman, proprietor of the Abraham Lincoln Bookshop; Paul M. Angle, director of the Chicago Historical Society; Benjamin P. Thomas, author of the well known one-volume work on the life of Lincoln; Otto P. Eisenschiml, Chicago chemist and author of the very popular book, "Why Was Lincoln Murdered?"; and Frederick J. Dornseif, Chicago authority on Lincoln.

"The Chicago Lincoln" statue is a project of the Lincoln Memorial commission created by the state legislature and appointed by Governor Stratton.

The Illinois Lincoln Memorial commission, which worked for almost four years to see that "The Chicago Lincoln" statue materialized, is headed by Leo A. Lerner, editor and publisher of the Edgewater Uptown News. Other representatives of the commission are State Representative William G. Pollack who sponsored the bill in the House, and the former State Senator Peter J. Miller.

Harry Spellbrink, president of the Commercial National Bank, is executive secretary of the commission. The Lincoln Square Chamber of Commerce planned the parades, advance publicity and speakers for the program. Arthur Sallas of Arthur Sallas and Co., Chicago, is chairman of the group's Statue Commission.

Avar Fairbanks, designer, professor of art at the University of Utah, is a renowned sculptor of pioneer Americans.

Lloyd Ostendorf, a Dayton, Ohio, free lance artist, drew the sketch for the 1½ life size statue. His design of a vigorous Lincoln as he appeared in Chicago in 1860 was awarded a $500 prize. From the drawing, Fairbanks submitted a working model on which the state awarded him a $30,000 contract.

Heading the publication committee for the event is George Brumlik, Chicago. This committee collected material to produce a big special edition filled with Lincoln lore and historical data.

Dr. Fairbanks and his wife were recently in Gettysburg, where he dedicated his statue of Albert Woolson the last Union survivor of the Civil war.

HENRY CLAY TREASURE

We think doctors and patient readers of HOBBIES alike will enjoy this little story which Tony Weitzel of the Chicago Daily News recently told.

"In their scanty leisure hours, surgeons go all out for hobbies. They paint some pretty good pictures. Many top surgeons are connoisseurs of art or collectors of rare and beautiful things. My friend Dr. Henry Cave, longtime Park Ave., medico, collected silver mint julep cups fashioned by 19th Century silversmiths.

"For years, Dr. Cave sought the handsome julep cup created for the Statesman Henry Clay. Finally traced it to a collector in Syracuse who refused to part with it at any price. When the collector died, his widow too, declined to give up the Henry Clay treasure.

"Then, one day, Dr. Cave was called to a consultation on a critical bit of surgery. His colleagues and Dr. Cave decided he should operate at once, to save the patient's life. As the orderlies wheeled her into surgery, the lady looked up at Dr. Cave. 'Doctor,' she whispered, 'if you save my life, I will give you something you have coveted a long time. You don't recognize me but I have the Henry Clay julep cup!' Dr. Cave operated. The lady got well. Dr. Cave went happily homeward with Henry Clay's silver cup.

"There's a surgeon who has remarkable musical gifts, including perfect pitch and a fabulous musical memory. Often, during office hours, his phone will ring. While a patient waits, the surgeon will listen intently then snort, 'No, maestro, the third movement goes like THIS! And he'll whistle, for some symphonic friend on the other end of the line, the complete movement of some obscure musical work."

SHIP MODELS

An interesting visitor to HOBBIES offices recently was Karl F. Wede, ship model expert of New York City. Mr. Wede, in his love for ship models, has acquired quite an outstanding collection, and he has met many ship model collectors and makers all over the country. In his "Yarns About Old Ship Models," we learn about some of the uses to which models have been put. He says:

"At various times these models served different purposes. We know them as gifts which were placed in the tombs of kings of Egypt. They played a role in religious rites of primitive peoples. They were children's toys throughout the ages. In the past three centuries they were used as decorations in castles or in the homes of nobles and merchants, and we still find them in churches throughout Europe.

"Today, a ship model is appreciated as decoration on a mantelpiece over a fireplace or as an ornament on the book shelf, giving distinctive atmosphere to the modern home. Large models may be found hanging from the ceiling of continental Town Halls or old taverns of port cities in England, Germany, and France. In this country, restaurants have become famous through their collections of ship models.

"Perhaps, you have seen, either at some maritime museum or in a private collection, models made of bone. The bone models belong to the category of Prisoner-of-War models, made during the Napoleonic wars by French prisoners in England. Between the years 1798 to 1815, many French ships were taken by the English. The crews were thrown into prison, especially at Dartmouth and other places such as Rochester Castle, Norman Cross, Perth and elsewhere.

"In his endeavor to beat England on the seas, Napoleon had many of his own subjects, as well as men from other nations pressed into service on his war ships. Amongst them were ivory carvers from Dieppe and West Africa. Although the bulk of the sea prisoners were made up of Frenchmen, there were also many Spanish and Dutch among them. When in 1806 the English fleet bombarded Copenhagen, they captured many Danish ships, and Danish sailors began to share the fate of Napoleon's sailors. In the War of 1812, American sailors started to swell the ranks of the prisoners.

"The industrious among them soon began to produce small articles, as souvenirs, to be bartered for food and tobacco. In the course of time the work became organized and work-teams were formed. They made tobacco boxes, games, figurines, and the like, but ship models became the most favored objects, because they brought the highest prices.

"The material for the hull, masts and spars consisted mostly of beef bones, collected from meals. But ivory, wood, whale-bone and sometimes metal, were also used."

Mr. Wede was a collector of nautical items for thirty years before deciding to become a dealer. In addition to models, and other nautical material including a fine representation of maritime books. We learned also from him that one of the most rewarding things about his hobby-business is the large group of interesting people he has met.

Kirsten Flagstad

By GEORG PLUCK

PART II

With Mme. Flagstad's American debut came her first really important phonographic offerings. Here was her voice in the very fullness of its youth and beauty. The fact that the recording process of the 1930's and the inadequate orchestral support offered her in these discs did not mirror all the abundance of that voice or truthfulness of sound can not detract from their real value. The "Walküre": Ho Yo To Ho, is the free and jubilant shout that it should be, though the recording is stifled and confined. Her "Tannhäuser": Elisabeths Gebet, certainly the most extended version of the scene, taking as it does two twelve-inch sides, is admirable in poise and dignity. Neither the "Lohengrin": Elsas Traum, or "Tannhäuser": Dich teure Halle, suggest the amplitude of her voice, however, for the deadening of the studio and the lifeless orchestra are truly oppressive. Perhaps the best of this first domestic group is the little album "Flagstad in Song." While even here all is not the ultimate in perfection they do come closer than the great arias in catching the true tone and timbre of her voice. All of the Grieg pieces are exquisite tone pictures, and I would be negligent to omit special mention of the unequalled rendition of "Ein Swan," one of the songs in which she has no approximate rival.

Before I begin a small discussion of her later recordings let me say this. Mme. Flagstad does collect her own records, though she has assured me by letter quite recently that the earliest group is by far from being complete and that she has about abandoned hope of ever making it so. Those that she has are being carefully saved for her daughter's little boy, Sigurd, so that some day he will know how his famous grandmother sounded in her youthful singing days. We can only hope that in time they may well be made available to all collectors through re-recordings, which would allow the precious originals to remain in the possession of their rightful heir.

In the late '30's a series of recordings were made that are technically superior to all that had been issued before. Many of these with the Philadelphia Orchestra are truly definitive in our time. Certainly among the most outstanding would be Beethoven's "Ah Perfido," an item not often seen in the catalogue before the days of Long Play, but when one hears this recording he realizes that subsequent issues would be unnecessary. The wonderful wealth of tone, the finely chiseled line, and perfection of phrasing place it among her finest offerings. The same might be said for the "Fidelio": Abscheulicher, and the superb "Oberon": Ozean, both treasure-houses of glorious singing. The great "Tristan und Isolde" Love Duets with Melchior are also brilliant examples of the breath-taking ease of her articulation even in the most difficult passages, though some find the orchestra with Edwin McArthur at the helm entirely too placid and in the background.

Let me say here a few words about

FLAGSTAD as Dido in "Dido and Aeneas"

Mme. Flagstad's personal choices. Among them are the quite scarce first recording of the Grieg Haugtussa Cycle, an album that was allowed to drop from circulation after selling some two thousand copies, so the soprano told me. Here the beauty of sound alone is breath-taking and the word values and treatment of the text is handled with the art of a true master. In contrast to certain criticisms of the later LP version, Mme. Flagstad herself found it almost equally acceptable, and so by the same token do I, for the maturing of her artistry is strikingly apparent and the voice especially rich. The Parsifal duets, now available on LP gave her much pleasure, as did also the Prologue to "Götterdämmerung," another short-lived disc in which her partner was again Lauritz Melchior.

She was sincerely thrilled with the opportunity to record the "Orfeo": Che farò senza Euridice, and "Dido": When I Am Laid in Earth. Her face actually beamed when she spoke of them and noted that they were among her only recorded excursions into the field of the classic composers, by far her favorites. This last disc, part of her post-war HMV issue is notable for great beauty of phrase, perfection of vocal line, and faultless legato, a feature that she found also most pleasing in the Handel Ombra maiu, certainly one of the finest recorded versions of the familiar aria. That this entire group of recordings comprises her greatest legacy to the future there can be no doubt, for they are almost uniformly well recorded and represent her artistic powers at the very peak of their maturity. Included in this selection is a large quantity of diversified material, such as the Bach, Brahms, Schubert, and Schumann songs that she had never before put on record. From this period, too, comes the Isolde Narrative and Curse, the Siegfried duets with Svanholm, the Immolation Scene with her beloved Maestro Furtwaengler conducting, the re-recordings of the Grieg Songs, this time with orchestra, the Five Wesendonk Songs of Wagner, and last but not least the complete recorded "Tristan." This last work is one of the greatest single triumphs on records, and certainly is unlikely to again be equalled.

When I talked with Mme. Flagstad by phone when she was in New York last year for the concerts with the NBC Symphony she said it had been her intention to do a complete "Götterdämmerung," also with Dr. Furtwaengler, but that his untimely death had destroyed the idea as she would not think of doing it with another conductor. This is tragedy indeed, for the third Brünnhilde was her greatest achievement and the one nearest her heart. She had earlier expressed great disappointment that it was not chosen for one of her broadcast performances during the 1950-51 season of the Metropolitan instead of Walküre. She felt there was no comparison between them in artistic satisfaction. Recently Mme. Flagstad has had her wish and America has heard her present day "Götterdämmerung" in a three part taped broadcast on World Music Festivals. (After Mr. Pluck wrote this article, he added the following note: "It seems that a woman does have the right to change her mind. I said in the article that Mme. Flagstad had said that she would not record a complete 'Götterdämmerung' without Furtwaengler. That is what she told me. I now find that her new recording will be released here soon by London—though recorded by HMV—Set Svanholm as Siegfried.") A.F.-A.

I had not originally intended to present Flagstad's case as The Great Wagnerian Soprano, but since it is a subject that is much discussed and also abused I can not resist adding a little extra fuel to the flames. When Flagstad first appeared in this country she had one of the most brilliantly developed and technically faultless voices ever heard on the stage. Her volume and endurance were of a type that is legendary and the perfect tone, ease of emission, and effortless breath among the most fabulous marvels of our time. When she returned here after the war, in 1947, there were some, such as the New York Times critic, Olin Downes, who found her equipment slightly impaired with the years. But there were many more, Claudia Cassidy of Chicago, Mr. Virgil Thompson, etc. to name only a few, who found that her voice had gained much more than it could possibly have lost. I must place myself with the latter group. My wife and I were fortunate enough to hear her and talk with her many times after that return, a return that created a great turmoil in the musical and political circles due to unwarranted attacks upon her conduct while in Norway during the war years. Cleared by the State Department here, and exonerated in her own country there was nevertheless a feeling of hostility and bitterness toward her which did not totally disappear until her farewell performances. It was as though there was an added dimension to her singing, for although it had always been the ultimate of vocal perfection there were times when it had appeared in the past to be disembodied from the singer, a thing apart and unrelated, as if she were only the instrument from which the sounds were produced but did not take an active part in the formation of the sounds or the drama of the words. Those days were gone, and in their place was a vibrant and active intelligence that sought new meanings and hidden nuances in each work, and the change was so drastically apparent in certain operas (note the first act of "Tristan und Isolde") that one would have thought them completely restudied.

Lest the very young collector or vocal student who never heard her in those former years obtain the impression from this that Mme. Flagstad had been completely lacking in dramatic deportment or the ability to characterize, let me immediately say, such was not the case. In fact, she was one of the few singers in the 1930's who made each gesture count and every movement some vital reality, but she was not stormy, nor tempestuous; rather mighty, and regal, and there are other moods to project, particularly for the concert singer, and this was the phase where many found her magnificent voice insufficient in itself to carry the subtle and shifting art of leader. This returning artist was a new woman, deeper, more human, more greatly motivated and consequently more sympathetic. This is the singer that Wagner would have loved.

When she appeared in New York last season at a benefit for the NBC Symphony her voice was remarkably preserved, a fact noted and attested to even by her oldest critic Olin Downes, who hailed her with superlatives. And lastly she was warm personally, in her relationship both with the public and her fellow artists. Not for her the raging temperament of "The Star," but always an attitude that was both considerate and humble. I have heard Dr. Walter Damrosch say that though he had heard and associated with Ternina, Lehmann, Sucher, Nordica, Klafsky, Gadski and almost all the other great Wagnerian singers since the operas were given first American performances, he had never heard a voice or an artist as close to the ideal as Mme. Flagstad. John Alden Carpenter said to me in a letter that he believed that any supposed rivalry between Flagstad and any other soprano of our time was purely imaginary, as in his opinion she was without an equal or for that matter even an approximate rival. In reading the books that many of our old favorites have left us we find that many of them felt that she was the greatest singer of her period, witness the mention of her work by such really greats as Frances Alda, Geraldine Farrar, John McCormack, and Mary Garden. Here is our own offering to the Golden Age. In this woman we have our ties to the past and the very greatest traditions of singing and artistry.

A few months ago in her last letter she said she was passing on a secret . . . she had changed record companies! This is news which until this time I have not heard elsewhere, and I am at a loss to say with whom this new alliance is as she did not say. However there is still hope of some great things, for though approaching 61 years of age, and with over 43 years on the stage behind her, she answered my bemoaning of the lack of a recorded "Flying Dutchman": Senta's Ballad, with . . . "I may do that yet."

A CYLINDER BY QUEEN VICTORIA

By HENRY HERROLD

Perhaps some explanation is due for the authenticity of the following. It is actually a condensed version of an article written by Captain M. S. Wellby, and printed in the July 1900 issue of "Harper's Magazine." Much of the article has been omitted but the passages pertaining to the Phonograph and Queen Victoria are intact as originally written. Although there is no mention of dates in the article, it may be assumed that the "wars" mentioned were those fought in the Province of Tigre in the early part of the year 1896.

"Late, the same day that Captain M. S. Wellby had arrived at the residence of Captain Harrington, the British resident in Adis Abeba, capital of Abyssinia, a message came that he was to be presented the following morning at eight o'clock to his Imperial Majesty King Menelek II, K.C.M.G., Negus Negasti, Emperor of Ethiopia, King of Kings.

"He felt very foolish when he sallied forth the next morning at seven o'clock donned in evening clothes and a felt hat, riding a mule, accompanied by Captain Harrington; through the busy parts of the city enroute to the palace. On arrival they were greeted by Monsieur Ilg, the King's secret adviser, who conducted them up a flight of stone stairs into the presence of his Imperial Majesty. The King, squatting as he was, gave the impression that he was a small man, but actually he was 5 feet 10 inches tall, and by no means handsome. There was a frank, open look about the features that were dominated by a very large mouth. The visit lasted for several hours, and during the course of the conversation it was learned that the King, who was, among other things, styled Janhoi, intended starting off on the following day to the wars in the Province of Tigre, which lay north of Adis Abeba.

"Two days later Captains Harrington and Wellby caught up with the King and his army at Barumeida. M. Ilg met them and conducted them to a camping ground close to the tents of the Emperor. The following day, being Sunday, was duly observed for the army remained stationed, and they had the honor of breakfasting with King Menelek himself, at 10 A.M. As might be expected there were crowds of attendants round and about the King's quarters. They passed under an awning and then entered a very fine circular tent, where they found the Negus seated on a low cushioned sofa ornamented with two wings, or arm rests. This second visit of Captains Harrington and Wellby to King Menelek at his camping grounds at Barumeida was very important, for Captain Harrington had brought a message for him from her Majesty, Queen Victoria, which she herself had spoken into a phonograph. After the breakfast was over, a table was brought in and placed before the King. Harrington placed his phonograph on the table and started it going. With the exception of the gurgling sound produced by the instrument, dead silence pervaded the tent. The Negus was highly gratified with the message, even standing up that he might the more distinctly catch the words, for he was much struck with their clearness and firmness. He listened to the Queen's gracious words time after time, and readily consented to an attempt to photograph the scene. The phonograph was finally carried off to the private quarters of Queen Taitu, who was equally charmed with the message, demanding several times a repetition of the Queen's words. It was a wonder to Captain Wellby that this particular cylinder was not completely worn out. The Queen, although understanding no English at all, was nevertheless easily able to recognize the mention of her own name."

BILL MORAN GIVES NEW INFORMATION ABOUT TAURINO PARVIS

By JIM WALSH

My statement in the July issue of HOBBIES that I hoped some reader would provide additional information about the Italian baritone, Taurino Parvis, has brought welcome help from a noted record collector, William R. Moran of 1335 Olive Lane, La Canada, Calif. Bill writes:

I have a book entitled "El Arte Lirico en el Teatro Colon," which gives the history of performances in the Colon of Buenos Aires from 1908 to 1933. In the biographical section is the following note, which I translate herewith:

PARVIS, TAURINO (Baritone) Born in Turin, September 15, 1879. He graduated in Law, abandoning his profession in order to dedicate himself to the lyric art. He took part in four consecutive seasons at La Scala in Milan, creating Paolo e Francesca of Mancinelli. He sang also at the Metropolitan in New York, Covent Garden in London, and in many other theatres in the world. In the Teatro Colon of Buenos Aires, he appeared in the 1917 season in Elisir d'Amore (Belcore, with Caruso as Nemorino); as Bolian in El Sueno de Alma (Alma's Dream), an opera by Eucardo, with Ninon Vallin, Charles Hackett, Gilda dalla Rizza, and Fanny Antuta; Siberia by Giordano (the role of Gleby); and as Kurvenal in Tristan und Isolde. In the 1922 season, Parvis sang Marcelo in Boheme (with Lauri-Volpi); in the title role in Gianni Schicchi (with Lauri-Volpi and Gilda dalla Rizza); Germont in Traviata (with Elvira del Hidalgo and Lauri-Volpi); and the Carpenter in "El Piccolo Marat," in a cast which included dalla Rizza and Lazaro, and which was directed by the composer, Pietro Mascagni.

MUSIC BOX DISCS

MIRA music box discs, 18½, $3.00; 15½, $2.50, plus postage and insurance. Some smaller sizes.—Squires, 2328 Channing, Berkeley, California. n1042

Mr. Moran continues:

"There are minor references to Parvis in several books in my library. For example, Pierre Key in his 'Enrico Caruso' mentions the baritone as a member of a company which presented opera in Cuba and Mexico in the spring of 1920. Other members of this company were: Caruso, Barrientos, Carmen Melis, Gabriella Besanzoni, Escobar, Mardones and Stracclari. The conductor was Padovani."

This information so kindly given by Mr. Moran is a valuable supplement to the Parvis series, but it leaves unsolved the question of whether the baritone is still living. I shall continue to hope for a letter from someone, at home or abroad, who knows the answer to that question.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Mary Jordan

By JIM WALSH

Mark Twain often argued that the first action taken by a human being after the creation of the world was the initial link in a chain of circumstances that led, logically and inevitably to everything else which has occurred since the dawn of time.

If Twain were still living he could cite the way in which this article has come to be written as good evidence for his theory.

In October, 1951, HOBBIES published my biographical sketch of a famous recording tenor, Charles W. Harrison, and his wife, professionally known as Beulah Gaylord Young. The article was illustrated with a photograph showing Harrison and five other singers enacting the Lucia Sextet for a 1912 Edison talking film.

One of the group was a lovely young contralto, Mary Jordan. I quoted Charlie Harrison as saying he had lost track of Miss Jordan, but believed she "married an oil man and moved to Texas." That was the first link in a new "chain" of the kind Mark Twain envisioned.

The second came when a friend of Mary Jordan's read the Harrison article and sent her a copy of HOBBIES. That in turn led Miss Jordan to write me a letter of thanks, which was published in the issue of April, 1952. She referred to the group in the photograph as "the old Edison Sextet" and recalled having sung as a member of many other Edison organizations. The eminent contralto also said, "I am still living in my beautiful home, which I came to as a bride, in San Antonio. My beloved husband, Colonel Charles Clement Cresson, died February 27, 1949."

Naturally, I added a link of my own by writing to Mrs. Cresson and telling her how much pleasure her letter had given me. I also said I should like some day to write a biographical sketch of her. For a long time it seemed there were to be no more links in the chain, for I heard nothing more from Mrs. Cresson for several years. Then she sent me a mass of clippings and several charming photos of herself, together with a letter explaining ill health had been the cause of her silence. She also revealed that she is the fifth woman on the front row in a group of Edison artists whose pictures were published with the Elizabeth Spencer article in September, 1951. That leaves just two unidentified persons in the photo—the second and fourth women.

Dear Jim Walsh: Will you ever forgive me for not writing you before this? You were so kind and if it were possible I would have written you a note.

I am a cripple with arthritis - have been in the hospital most of this year - and now my eyes are dim and can scarcely see. I travel in a wheel chair in my home; at times I cannot hold a pen. On Nov. 27 last I was 76 years young. My friends from all over the country write me recalling happy times together.

I am physically crippled but mentally stronger than ever—also have my keen sense of humor. Please forgive my writing. God Bless You! And enjoy a Happy Christmas. Mary Jordan Cresson . . . You will hear from me soon again. Let me know if you receive this and the large envelope.

It goes without saying that I replied warmly to this appealing letter and that I was elated when the "large envelope" containing biographical material and photographs arrived a short time later. Obviously, in view of her physical condition. I have not been in constant communication with the lady in San Antonio, but I do have enough information to tell something of her life and recording activities in this article, which will appear in this November HOBBIES as a 77th birthday "gift".

II Biographical Sketches

We may as well begin our study of Mary Jordan's career by considering a couple of brief biographical sketches. The one-volume MacMillan Encyclopaedia of Music and Musicians, published in 1938, contains the following alphabetical entry:

JORDAN, Mary, Welsh dramatic and concert soprano, born Cardiff, Nov. 27, 1879. She studied under d'Auria, J. H. Stewart, Saenger and Maurel, in 1911 and made her debut with the Boston Opera Company, and remained with that company until 1914. She has appeared frequently in recitals and in oratorios at the principal music festivals.

The catalog of Edison Blue Amberol cylinders for April, 1914, says:

As the leading contralto of the Century Opera Company, New York City, which is giving notable productions of Grand Opera in English, Mary Jordan occupies a prominent place in the operatic world. She was born at Cardiff, Wales. She studied under many of the most prominent teachers, and before entering opera, appeared with many of the leading concert orchestras. It is in the field of English Grand Opera, however, that Miss Jordan has made her greatest success. In addition to her present engagement at the Century Opera House, New York, she has appeared with the Aborn Grand Opera Company, and the Henry W. Savage production of "Parsifal." Her voice is of great soul quality, richness and power.

Items in the Edison Phonograph Monthly show that Mary Jordan was a famous White House singer during the administration of President Woodrow Wilson. The following is from the issue for May, 1916:

Mary Jordan, the prominent contralto whose Blue Amberol reproductions have delighted owners of Mary Jordan as she appeared at the height of her career. She inscribed the photograph "To Jim Walsh with sincere appreciation of all he has done for the artists of yesteryear. Sincerely, Mary Jordan Cresson."

Amberolas in all parts of the world, was one of the artists who appeared in the last musicale that was given at the White House in Washington this season. The artists associated with Miss Jordan in the concert were Percy Grainger, pianist; Paul Reimers, tenor, and Charles Gilbert, accompanist at the piano. Miss Jordan was among those who enjoyed a dinner with President and Mrs. Wilson, the social affair following the concert.

Miss Jordan narrowly escaped injury in an elevator accident in New York recently. She was leaving the Mishkin photograph studio when the elevator, which she occupied with two other passengers, dropped several stories. In order to rescue the occupants of the car it was necessary to cut a hole through the top of it and reach them with a ladder. Miss Jordan was shaken up badly but received no serious injuries.

In May, 1917, the Edison Amberola Monthly said:

Mary Jordan, the popular American contralto, who makes Blue Amberol records, recently had presented to her a beautiful pin in the form of a laurel wreath, with lyre and arrows, surmounted by an eagle with wings spread. The gift was from Mrs. Woodrow Wilson as a memento of Miss Jordan's singing at the White House.

A much more detailed account of Mary Jordan's career may be found under the heading of "Interesting Service Women" in The Army and Navy Journal for March 17, 1928. It is an excellent brief biography in itself:

"The services may well be proud of their women who, in spite of the handicap of constant moving, have found time to make places for themselves in the business world, and in fields of science and art. There is no doubt about the fact that the Army has in its midst one of the foremost contralto singers in the world—Mary Jordan, who in private life is Mrs. C. C. Cresson, wife of Major Charles C. Cresson, J.A.G.D., U.S.A. At present Major Cresson is stationed in the Office of the Judge Advocate General and he and his charming wife are living at 1661 Crescent Place, Washington, D. C.

Has Traveled Extensively

"Though born of English parents in Cardiff, Wales, Mary Jordan has spent all her life in America, and it was in this country she received her entire musical education which has equipped her so splendidly for the opera, oratorio and concert stage. She has traveled extensively from one end of the country to the other and has sung from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Alaska to the Gulf of Mexico. She insists that America contains everything an artist needs for development and inspiration, and the fact that she now holds an elevated position among the leading singers of the world amply bears out her contention.

"Mary Jordan has an astonishingly large repertoire, and as leading contralto of the Century Grand Opera Company and other organizations of similar standing she has sung such roles as Amneris in 'Aida,' Dalilah in 'Samson et Dalilah,' Azucena in 'Il Trovatore,' Laura in 'La Gioconda,' Ortrud in 'Lohengrin,' and Carmen in 'Carmen.' Her recital programs have special interest as she sings in no less than eight different languages. Few singers before the public are in more constant demand, and fewer still have greater artistry.

Gave Recitals at White House

"This delightful artist has been twice summoned by requests to appear in recitals at the White House. The first summons was during the Wilson regime, and the second was during the present (Coolidge) administration, when she appeared in connection with the most distinguished annual social function in Washington the state dinner given by the President and the First Lady of the Land to the members of the Cabinet and their wives.

"For about twelve years Mary Jordan was soloist for the Jewish Synagogue, Temple Emmanuel, 5th Avenue, New York, and also for the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn. She has also been soloist for leading orchestras of America, among which are numbered the Boston Symphony, New York Philharmonic, Philadelphia Orchestra, New York Symphony, Cincinnati Orchestra, Cleveland Orchestra, Montreal Orchestra, and the San Francisco Orchestra, and has also been soloist on tour throughout the United States in the great oratorios such as the Messiah and Stabat Mater.

Made Concert Tour Through Orient

"During the past two years she has been in the Philippines, stationed at Fort William McKinley, where Major Cresson was on duty, and was soloist for the Philippine Orchestra, and also a professor of singing at the University of the Philippines. She was on an extended concert tour throughout China and Japan, giving large concerts in Hong Kong, Tientsin, Peking and other points. She also gave a number of recitals throughout the Philippines, and on the occasion of her concert in Manila on Sept. 30, 1925, the Manila Times of the next day said in part:

"Mary Jordan for ten days was heralded by her press agent as second to no other contralto in the world. . . . She sang to an audience of over six hundred, which is the biggest audience that any single artist has ever had in Manila, and there was not one of the entire audience who last night did not agree with her press agent and conclude that she has no superior. . . . Mary Jordan came, she saw and she conquered."

"On many occasions Mary Jordan has been soloist for conventions of the American Legion and has been selected to act as such for the large annual convention in San Antonio in October. During her stay in the Philippines, she learned many songs in various native dialects which she has sung in concerts since her return, dressed in native Philippine costumes."

III Press Comments

The critical reviews of Mary Jordan's singing published in newspapers large and small were so uniformly laudatory it will not be necessary to quote many as evidence that she was an artist of far more than ordinary merit. Regardless of time or place, the reviewers seemed of one opinion concerning her distinctive abilities.

A critic for the nation's most influential newspaper The New York Times, said: "Mary Jordan, an admired contralto, filled Aeolian Hall with a gala audience. She introduced not only French, Russian and old Hebrew airs, which were re-demanded, but also, by request, some Negro folk-songs which she sang with much sympathy."

The New York World said: "Mary Jordan, popular American contralto, was in fine voice, and made a stunning picture. Intelligence and charm marked the delivery of all her songs." The New York Evening Mail termed the recital "a triumph," and remarked, Mary Jordan Cresson's home in San Antonio, Tex.

Mary Jordan as she appeared for her solo, in the "Flower Maid," given by the Henry Savage Opera Co.

"Miss Jordan knows how to sing and how to interpret." The New York Sun said her voice was one "of velvety beauty," and in the Mid-West, The Chicago Herald and Examiner commented: "Miss Jordan has a voice that is at all times round and smooth, and full throughout its entire range. There is a well-thought-out purpose behind every one of her beautifully produced tones." The Indianapolis Star praised "her artistry and personal charm," saying: "Hers is a big voice of generous compass, with the deep contralto notes so generally adored. It is refreshing to see a singer so free from self-consciousness."

Probably one of the most eloquent tributes to the contralto was paid by the Sacramento, California, Union, which said on March 4, 1921: "Her voice is exquisite. It has all the beautiful sonorous sweetness of a deep-toned cello, and with it there is a haunting cadence that remains long after the voice is stilled. Added to the warm mellowness of tone there is a remarkable range, and the charm of perfect production and clear diction."

And in 1923 the reviewer for a Mexico City paper said: "Mary Jordan, beautiful and gracious, is a contralto of widespread recognition, both for her work in concert and opera. Miss Jordan possesses the thrilling lower notes of the true contralto. Yet for a voice of such great depth her high notes are astoundingly fine and beautiful. Miss Jordan has great temperament, which is always under control of her fine mind. It would have been impossible to select a more enjoyable or varied program, including as it did songs in French, English, Russian, German and Spanish. Miss Jordan sang in a manner most thrilling, receiving an ovation after each number."

The remarkable versatility of Miss Jordan's programs was a quality often commented on by the critics. A good example is the recital given in Manila on November 1, 1926. In the beginning she sang four numbers in German, "Ehre Gottes," (God's Glory in Nature), by Beethoven; "Ave Maria" (Schubert); "Sapphische Ode" and "O Liebliche Wangen," both by Brahms. Four French songs followed, "Beau Soir," by Debussy; "Serenade Italienne," (Chausson); "La Vagabonde" (Bloch) and "Tes Yeux" (Rabey). Then came four in English: "Deep River," an American Negro spiritual dedicated by the composer, Harry T. Burleigh to Miss Jordan; "Water Boy," an American Negro convict song; Cyril Scott's "Lullaby," and "Moon Marketing," by Powell Weaver. Finally three Richard Strauss numbers in German: "Allerseelen," "Traum Durch Die Dammernung" and "Cecilie."

The intellectual quality in Mary Jordan's approach to music was shown in a series of lecture-recitals on "Music and How to Listen to It," which she gave in her San Antonio home. The first recital interpreted and explained the music from four operas. In the second, Miss Jordan sang and analyzed French and German classics of song, old and modern. The third recital dealt with folk music of many nations, including songs of Little Russia and the Philippines, sung in the original dialects.

Perhaps Mary Jordan never received a more appreciated compliment than was paid to her when Ann Farrell, a young girl from Scranton, Pennsylvania, which Miss Jordan considers her "home town," was awarded a musical scholarship. Speaking at a dinner for Miss Farrell before she left Scranton to study in New York, Dr. D. E. Jones, the music critic of the Scranton Tribune, said:

"She has a God-given voice of superb quality, the nearest to my ideal, Mary Jordan, that I have heard in this city. Whenever I see or hear Ann Farrell, I am reminded of another little girl (Mary Jordan), whom we are proud to call a Scrantonian, and who went out into the great musical world and won honors for this city."

In her adopted home of San Antonio, Miss Jordan's voice was one of the first ever heard by radio. There was no local station in San Antonio, shortly after the first World War, but a man named Sam Woolford arranged for some broadcasting to be done through what he has described as "a primitive loud speaker system which resembled a combination of an old Edison morning glory horn, a series of condensers and other radio paraphernalia." The broadcasting was done from the Fort Sam Houston signal corps laboratory. Radio trucks from the post, Camp Travis Kelly and Brooks field were stationed downtown, in front of the Alamo, in Travis park and in front of the city hall. Woolford recalls that "ten or twelve amateurs in the residence districts rigged up horns which extended from windows and doors of backyard radio shacks, and the neighbors were invited to hear the voices come over the air."

Mary Jordan as Amneris in "Aida," second act, Boston Opera House, 1911

Miss Jordan sang from 8 to 9 the first night, and said Woolford: "That night 5,000 persons jammed Travis park. Alamo plaza was crowded. Perhaps I had been too enthusiastic about the new radio, for despite all the signal corps could do, the radio voice could only be heard at a maximum distance of about 30 feet. Yet people crowded closer to hear the music and seemed to be satisfied as others moved in to listen."

CURRENT COLLECTORS' RECORDINGS

JOE HOWARD

By ALLEN G. DEBUS

In the last twenty years there has been no single entertainer who has so completely identified himself with the music of the turn of the century as Joe Howard has. The songs he wrote forty, and fifty years ago are today commonly accepted as popular standards. His frequent appearances on all of the top television variety shows testifies to his all time popularity.

Joe Howard was born seventy-seven years ago, and since he ran away from home at the age of seven, he has been in show business. At first he sang in saloons for money, and then after trying out for a local production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," he obtained his first stage role - "Little Eva." While traveling through the West in the late 1880s and early 1890s he met such legendary figures as the James brothers and the sheriff of Dodge City, Bat Masterson. In the late nineties he wrote two of his best remembered song hits, "On the Boulevard" (1897) and "Hello, My Baby" (1899).

Already a tremendous success in the Far West and the Middle West by the turn of the century, he turned to Chicago to launch a series of musical comedies in collaboration with Will Hough and Frank Adams. From "The Umpire" (1905) came "You Look Awful Good to Father" and "Cross Your Heart," both of which songs seem to have sold well on records. "The Time, the Place, and the Girl" (1907) had "I Don't Like Your Family," "Blow the Smoke Away," and "Honeymoon." One of my favorite Joe Howard songs, "Oh Gee Be Sweet to Me Kid," was in the production of "The Girl Question" (1907). However, without any doubt his greatest song hit is "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now" which was originally part of the score of "The Prince of Tonight" (1909).

While a new Howard musical appeared almost yearly, he continued to write other songs, many of which became hits. His "On a Saturday Night" (1902) was a successful rival to Harry Von Tilzer's "On a Sunday Afternoon." Two years later he wrote one of the finest of all cake walk melodies - "Goodbye My Lady Love." This song was recorded by Harry Macdonough for Victor at a much slower tempo than Joe Howard sings it today (Monarch 2851). The following year he wrote another song somewhat similar to "Hello My Baby," titled "Central Give Me Back My Dime." And in 1918 he wrote the music for the very popular "Somewhere in France is the Lily."

In the twenties Joe Howard appeared all over the country as a vaudeville headliner and from time to time revived some of his musical comedies of ten to twenty years before. Hollywood revived "The Time, the Place, and the Girl" as one of the first sound musicals in 1929, but as vaudeville began to peter out and movies and the dance bands of the Thirties took its place most of the headliners of earlier years had a rather difficult time getting good bookings. However, Joe Howard was "rediscovered" by Billy Rose in the mid thirties and since that time Joe Howard and the Gay Nineties are terms which have become practically synonymous. He starred at the New York World's Fair in 1939 and shortly thereafter became the star of his very successful radio show, Model's "Gay Nineties Review." "The Time the Place and The Girl" was revived again in 1944, and the following year Hollywood produced his biography, "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," starring Mark Stevens and June Hav-

er. I am certain that everyone who has seen this film will agree with me that it was one of the finest biographies ever to have come out of Hollywood. Since the advent of television he has been active in that field as well as continuing to appear at the finest night clubs in this country and Canada. This July he completed a very successful week headlining at the Palace theatre in New York, and I understand that he now intends to retire and enjoy a well earned rest. But let us hope that at least he will appear occasionally on network TV. He has just completed his autobiography which was published in July. This is a fascinating book crammed with facts and pictures and it should be on the bookshelf of every collector interested in this country's Show Business "Greats."

In his seventy year career, Joe Howard has made very few recordings. His only acoustic recording was made for Pathe' in 1920. It is a fine recording of his number "Whistle a Song." He had a natural voice for acoustic records and it is a shame that he didn't make more of them. It is interesting to note that he sounds almost identically the same today as he did then.

Pathe' 22361 Joseph Howard - Whistle a Song
Robert Bruce - All I Want is You

In connection with the Hollywood revival of "The Time, the Place, and the Girl," in 1929 he recorded two of the hits from this show for Brunswick:

Brunswick 4340 Honeymoon/ Blow the Smoke Away.

In the mid Thirties he made a medley of his most popular songs for Vocalion:

Vocalion 3357 Hello My Baby and Goodbye My Lady Love/ I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now and Honeymoon

He also made some private recordings while he was starring at the New York World's Fair. These were evidently not issued for the public as the two I have in my collection have the title and Mr. Howard's name both in his handwriting. I list here the two that I know of and I am sure that others must have been made at the same time:

(Columbia ?) matrix 22442 What's the Use of Dreaming
(Columbia ?) matrix 22445 New York World's Fair (special song written for the Fair)

Finally, at the time that "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now" was released by Hollywood, he made an album of records for De Luxe in Cincinnati. These recordings are excellent and besides being available in album form they were also sold as singles. I know they are still available from De Luxe since I have seen them in a local record store as a two record 45 rpm album, within the last few weeks. The information I give here relates to the 78 rpm pressings which are possibly out of print:

"Art is indeed not the bread, but the wine of life." — JOHN PAUL RICHTER

Gustavus Hesselius, Early American Painter

By RAYMOND J. WALKER

In the will of Gustavus Hesselius, proved May 29, 1755, he describes himself as a "face painter," and mentions a son John as executor. From this fact, taken in connection with the fact that Gustavus painted altar pieces for three Virginia churches, it is reasonable to believe that some Southern as well as some of the early Philadelphia portraits attributed to John Hesselius were executed by his father, who was painting before the middle of the 18th Century.

Gustavus Hesselius lived in Philadelphia between 1744 and 1750. In the hand books on American art he has been overlooked because all the portraits marked Hesselius have been attributed to his son. Gustavus was a Swede and John W. Jordan wrote: that he was "undoubtedly the first builder of organs in the Colonies, antedating the Boston maker by fifteen years." Hesselius, who was a member of the Moravian Church, built the organ for the Moravian Church in Bethlehem, Pa., in 1744, as can be proved by his bills for the work.

Among the now disputed Philadelphia portraits were those of Joshua Maddox, a well-known merchant and his wife, and of Mrs. Wallace, one of the belles of the Philadelphia Dancing Assembly of 1748, all of which are painted in the style of Kneller, with the broad shadows noticeable in the work of that artist. This, and other marked characteristics, have caused these several unsigned portraits to be attributed to Hesselius. One of these is that of Mary McCall, whose attractive face looks forth from a miniature of the same period.

Mary McCall was the wife of William Plumstead who served several terms as mayor of Philadelphia. The lady's brother, Archibald McCall, whose miniature was painted about the same time, was a leading East India merchant of the day. He had a home at the corner of Second and Union Streets which was filled with many curios and his garden was a strange collection of animals and birds.

The portrait of Joseph Pemberton and his wife, Anne Galloway, daughter of Joseph Galloway, of Anne Arundel County, Maryland, have also been assigned to Hesselius because of certain marked characteristics in style.

Anne Hollingsworth Wharton in her "Heirlooms in Miniatures," Philadelphia, 1898, gives us an anecdote concerning Pemberton. It seems that Pemberton had the intention of marrying a girl of a prominent Virginia family. On his way south he stopped at "Tulip Hill," the estate of the Galloway family, where he was hospitably entertained and was smitten by the charms of Anne.

The marked characteristics of the style of Kneller noticed in these early portraits seem to prove that they were by the elder Hesselius because his son could not have studied with Kneller, nor could he have had an opportunity of seeing many of Kneller's paintings for there is no record of John Hesselius having visited England before the middle of the 18th Century.

John Hesselius for a long time was believed to be the son of Samuel Hesselius, a Swedish missionary, but it has since been discovered that he was the son of Gustavus and that Samuel and Andreas, the missionaries, were his uncles. This fact was proved by Charles Henry Hart who made an exhaustive study of the Hesselius family. John was living in Philadelphia in 1749 and his name appears on a list of the subscribers to the Philadelphia Dancing Assembly of which Mrs. Wallace was a member. He evidently went to Maryland sometime before 1755. This fact is proved by a letter written at Philadelphia on June 26, 1755. It is interesting to note that John married the widow of Henry Woodward who had an estate at Bellefield on the Severn River.

In "One Hundred Years Ago," by Elizabeth Hesselius Murray, a great-granddaughter of John and Mrs. Woodward, she tells of her great-grandmother championing the cause of the early Methodists in Maryland and welcoming them to her home, Primrose, but when the Methodists finally broke with the Church of England she remained an Episcopalian. John painted a portrait of his wife and two of his children, which justifies what her grandson, Dr. Addison, wrote of her distinguished beauty in old age.

Mrs. John Hesselius was a poet and in her long descriptive poem "Family Picture," mentions her children Harriet, Charlotte, Caroline and Eliza. There is a miniature of Charlotte which is quite too late to have been painted by her father, who died in 1778. Charlotte became the wife of Thomas Jennings Johnson and seems to have inherited her mother's love of poetry for she left a rhymed will purporting to be that of William Farris, watchmaker at Annapolis. Eliza and Charlotte had a double wedding, the former was married to Walter Dulane, Jr. Incidentally the rhymed will of Charlotte is printed in "Old Maryland" by Frank B. Mayer.

Thomas Johnson was the son of the governor of Maryland. The double wedding was held at Primrose at night. The bridesmaids were Sarah Leitch, two Miss Murrays and a Miss Cromwell. Miss Leitch was the daughter of a major killed at Harlem in the Revolution. One of the Murray girls afterward became the wife of Governor Lloyd and the other married General Mason. Miss Cromwell married a Mr. Lee. Miss Leitch became the bride of John Addison who was related to the Hesselius family. Rebecca Young Woodward then Mrs. Philip Rogers, a half-sister of the brides, attended the wedding. She married Rogers in 1776 and there is a miniature of her by Charles Wilson Peale.

In the "Family Picture" her mother was very kind to Harriet for she was a widow at the time. She remarried and as Mrs. Murray became the grandmother of the author of "One Hundred Years Ago."

PRINTS, MAPS

WHY COLLECT MAPS?

In these days of extensive world travel, the place of maps comes more and more into prominence. In studying the older maps and comparing them with modern ones, we gain background of the history of the countries that we visit. Aside from interest, old maps with their delicate color fit into almost any color scheme.

Most of the oldest maps were made from woodcuts. However, the maps in the first two editions of Ptolemy, published in Italy in 1472, were made from copper plates.

Even the most unadvanced civilization had a form of maps. For instance our arctic voyagers, Sir. J. Ross, Sir. F. L. MacClintock and others had rough maps drawn for them by Eskimos. C. F. Hall, in his "Life with the Esquimaux," published in London, in 1864, pictured specimens of such maps. Other explorers profited from maps that the Indians drew on bark for them. It is recorded that Tupaya, a Tahitian, who accompanied Captain Cook in the "Endeavor" to Europe, supplied the explorer with maps.

The maps found among the native Mexicans when the Spaniards first found and invaded their country were of a superior quality. They even had maps of villages, maps of the Aztec country. History records that Montezuma presented Cortez with a map, painted on Nequen cloth, of the Gulf Coast.

Throughout the story of mankind's early adventures, the map played an important part. Lithography of later years has made the collecting of maps more lucrative, and it is not surprising to find that the map hobby has many devotees.

ANTIQUE JEWELRY

Bog-Oak Jewelry

From the December 16, 1876,
Harper's Weekly

Irish oak has been held in high estimation from the earliest times—so much so that William Rufus selected it to be used in the construction of Westminster Abbey. Large forests of this oak were submerged ages ago, and have lain in the peat-bogs ever since; hence the name of the variety under consideration — bog-oak. The wood so named is as black as ebony, but was before its submersion the color of ordinary oak. Its present color has been produced by the action of the salts of iron, which, percolating through the earth, converted the tannin, in which oak is very rich, into ink. Until about thirty years ago Irish bog-oak was used only for fuel, but at that time some enterprising Irish artists began to carve jewelry and table ornaments out of it. At first the demand for it was but slight, but in the year 1853, when the first International Exhibition was held in Dublin, the trade received a great impulse, and from that time it steadily developed into an industry of importance. In its infancy the manufacture of bog-oak goods was almost confined to Dublin, and is still extensively carried on in that city; but of late years it has extended to Belfast, where now some of the finest carvings and best gold-mounted goods are manufactured. Those goods have been patronized by her Majesty Queen Victoria and other crowned heads of Europe, and from their superior durability and cheapness, as compared to jet, have completely superseded the latter throughout Ireland and wherever else they have been introduced.

Shown at the Centennial was a display of ornaments, consisting of the Royal Tara Brooch, a shamrock and lyre necklace, Celtic Crosses, and a spectacle case, selected from the extensive exhibit in the British section, Main Building, of William Gibson, of Belfast, Ireland.

The Royal Tara Brooch, so named from the fact of its being a fac-simile of that worn by the kings of Ireland, and from the original having been found near the Hill of Tara, illustrates the high class of art and fine culture to which the Irish had attained at a time when the greater portion of the rest of the world was in a state of semi-barbarism. The emblematic decorations with which it is embellished, as also those of the Celtic crosses, clearly demonstrate the fact that the early Irish were Christians. The Irish used various emblems to illustrate the sublime truths of Christianity. Thus the circle round the cross, or a snake forming a circle by catching its tail in its mouth, represented Eternity, being without beginning and without end, and so in the like manner did St. Patrick use the shamrock to illustrate the doctrine of the Trinity, it being but one leaf, and yet consisting of three leaflets. Did our space permit, we might multiply instances of this nature almost ad infinitum. But to resume our description of the Tara Brooch. It is nearly circular in outline, its margin being broken at intervals by snake-head projections and by the pin which crosses it transversely. The upper segment of the circle, much narrower than the lower, is ornamented with richly carved scroll-work, except in the center where an eminence occurs, which is partly concealed by fine gold Celtic interlacing work. In the center of the lower segment there is an elaborate carving of intertwined snakes, on either side of which are large eminences with similar fine gold adornments to that already described. Between those and the margins other interwindings of snakes appear, while interspersed throughout this portion of the brooch are smaller eminences representing jewels some being capped with beautifully chased fine gold. The margins throughout are raised, and in this part of the brooch, as in the pin, are broken by heads of snakes and birds and scroll-work. The pin, for purposes of description, may be divided into a head, stem, and point. The former partakes of the characters of the parts already described, with the addition of a ram's head at the extremity nearest the stem; the stem is ornamented with a diamond-shaped plate of fine gold, and the point is elaborately carved with human heads and scroll-work terminating in a ram's head. The entire pin is represented as crossing and being crossed by the brooch.

The Irish Celts used in the Tara Brooch, of which there were different patterns, to fasten their plaids, as the Scotch Highlanders still do, but the particular pattern, under notice was that worn only by the kings; hence its name of Royal Tara.

The Celtic crosses, like the ancient Irish crosses from which they are copied, are carved in panels. Their ornamentation is similar to that of the Tara Brooch, with the addition of a rope border. Their circles are emblematic of eternity; and their mottoes—one in Greek (A.E.I.), signifies constancy; the other, in Irish (AGHRADH, pronounced agra), is an Irish term of endearment. The letters are so finely pierced out as to be distinctly recognizable on the reverse side.

The gold-mounted shamrock and lyre necklace is also very beautiful, we can not conclude without a few words on the spectacle case, which is carved in relief, having on its front the Irish harp, round tower, and wolf-dog, with ivy leaves, shamrocks, and forget-me-nots, and on its back oak leaves and acorns, with the Irish cross inclosed within a wreath of fern leaves. This really beautiful and useful article is attached by means of silver chains to a hook of the same metal cut in the form of an Irish harp, which enables it to be suspended from the belt of the wearer.

Mr. Gibson displays an endless variety of this jewelry, some of it mounted in gold, as well as a large assortment of very beautifully carved table ornaments.

Famous Roads

By D. TUDOR HARRELL

*It is one thing to see your road,
Another to cut it.*

—DANIEL DERONDA

General Andrew Jackson's 516 mile military road constructed after the war of 1812, ran from Nashville, Tenn. to New Orleans, La. It was 35 feet wide except at the causeways across the swamps.

The road ran through the lands of the Choctaw Indian Nation between Columbus and Jackson, Miss. The reconnaissance survey was completed March 14, 1817, and on June 7 of the same year, Capt. Young began the final survey.

On March 27, 1818, Congress approved an extra $5,000, which was approved by Pres. James Monroe, and on March 8, 1819, Major Perrin Willis was ordered by General Ripley to supervise the construction on the southern end of the road.

The first post office on the Mississippi section was opened at Columbus, March 6, 1820.

In 1824 the southern end of the road from Columbus to the Benys (Bowyer) River was obstructed for a distance of 150 miles by a second growth of timber making it impassible for wheeled carriages.

This, together with the removal of the State Capitol of Mississippi from Columbus to Jackson in 1822, brought about the construction of the Robinson Road in 1824-25, which was named for the builder.

Also famous was the 624 mile Mullan wagon road from Ft. Benton in Dakota Territory, the steamboat terminus on the Missouri River, to old Ft. Walla Walla (Wallula) in Washington Territory. This stretch of road was 127 miles east of The Dalles, and head of the old trail traversed by the Indians on their way from the Pacific slope to hunt buffalo east of the Rocky Mountains.

The road was authorized by Congress in 1857, and an appropriation of $100,000 was placed at the disposal of Secretary of War, J. Holt for this purpose. A survey was made in 1858 by Lt. John Mullan, 2nd Artillery Regiment U.S.A., for whom the road was named.

After arriving at The Dalles, Oregon, on May 10, 1859, Mullan proceeded to improve the existing road to Ft. Walla Walla, and was joined there by an escort of 100 picked soldiers from the 3rd Artillery Regiment, commanded by Lt. White and Lt. Howard.

The road was marked by mile posts branded M. R. Miles to indicate the distance along the military road from Ft. Walla, Walla.

In July, 1860, the road was opened through Mullan's Pass over the Rocky Mountains, and on August 1, 1860, they reached Ft. Benton. The Mullan Road was placed in operation in 1860, although it was not completed until 1862. The cost of this wagon road was $230,000.

It was built to transport supplies to forts, camps, and homes, between the head of navigation of the Missouri and Columbia Rivers, which could not be reached from the Oregon trail to the south.

The Bozeman Trail, has many names, the Montana Road, the Jacobs-Bozeman Cut-Off, the Powder River Road to Montana, The Big Horn Road, the Virginia City Road, the Bonanza Trail, The Yellowstone Road, the Reno Road and The Carrington road.

It was 967 miles long, traversing the lands of the Sioux Indians, the Cheyennes, the Arapahoes, and the Blackfeet. It was a short cut from the Oregon Trail to the gold diggings at Virginia City, which became the capitol of the territory of Montana in 1864.

The Bozeman Trail originated at Ft. Kearney, Nebr. where all soldiers were assembled for fighting Indians. It started at Ft. Sedgewick, and was named after John M. Bozeman, of Coweta County, Georgia. Bozeman together with John M. Jacobs were determined to find a short cut to the Montana gold fields during the period of 1862-63.

In 1864, Bozeman piloted a long train of wagons over his chosen path, through the heart of the Indian lands forbidden to white men by a treaty made in 1851 between the United States and the Sioux Nation.

After the government won the decisive Wagon Box Victory in 1867, Red Cloud's terms providing for abandonment of all the forts erected throughout the Indian hunting ground, and the discontinuance of all further efforts to open a wagon road into Montana, were accepted in 1868.

In a cemetery on a bluff overlooking the city of Bozeman, Mont., a stone monument was erected bearing the following inscription: "In memory of John M. Bozeman, age 32 years, killed by Blackfoot Indians on the Yellowstone, April 18, 1867. He was a native of Georgia, and one of the first settlers of Bozeman, Montana, for whom the town was named."

Wimbledon Bank

By F. H. GRIFFITH

Mechanical banks that were made in England comprise an interesting group of specimens to challenge a collector. As we reach No. 50 in our numerical classification of the mechanical banks we have our first English made bank of the series, namely the Wimbledon Bank. The bank is not only an attractive rare item, but it is believed to be the earliest known mechanical bank manufactured in England.

The date of the registration of the bank is September 21, 1885, and it was made by John Harper & Company, an old line English foundry who were an active factor in their field. They made a number of different mechanical banks, but details on these and the Company itself will be covered in the future by a special article.

The bank pictured is from the fine, extensive collection of Andrew Emerine, one of the earlier collectors of mechanical banks. Mr. Emerine purchased the bank in 1939 from E. R. Harvey, a Norwich, England, antique dealer. Mr. Harvey in turn had obtained the bank from an individual who had owned it for approximately 36 years. This original owner had 12 to 14 mechanical banks that he purchased in 1903 from an old, established, wholesale toy warehouse in London. Some of these banks were old stock even at the time he purchased them in 1903. He was a mechanical toy dealer and the banks interested him so he held on to them until 1915, at which time they were all lent out to local banks for the purpose of raising funds for the Belgian Refugees Fund. A few years after this a persistent individual managed to purchase a 'Spise a Mule' from him. However, he apparently regretted letting it go and the longer he kept the remainder the less he was inclined to sell any others. Eventually, he let others go and finally Mr. Harvey purchased the Wimbledon Bank, John Bull Money Box, Grenadier Bank, Hoop-La Bank, and the Tank and Cannon. This was done over a period of time and the banks were purchased one at a time. Mr. Emerine was fortunate in being able to obtain all five of these banks from Mr. Harvey. Their condition is, of course, exceptionally good due to the unusual circumstances of their never having been in active circulation.

The Wimbledon is quite attractively painted. The base is green and the brown fort has the flag in red with a black cross on white ground. The prone soldier's hat and trousers are in black trimmed with yellow. His jacket is pink with yellow cuffs and collar. The gun he is holding is black.

To operate the bank the gun is first set to fire as shown in the picture. In setting the spring operated mechanism the head of the soldier tilts slightly forward as though taking aim. A penny is then placed on the gun as shown. A small lever is then pressed and the coin is fired into the fort as the soldier snaps his head back into position.

The name Wimbledon Bank, which appears inscribed on the base, has a definite connection with the subject and action of the bank. The National Rifle Association was formed in 1860 and incorporated by Royal Charter 25 in November of 1890. The first meeting was held on Wimbledon Common in 1860 and frequent subsequent meetings were held in Wimbledon over a period of 30 years. These meetings included competition with other countries and the Queen's Trophy was a coveted prize awarded by Queen Victoria. This was an annual award and in later years it became the King's Trophy. Space and safety eventually were the motivating factors that caused the Association to move to Bisley in July, 1890. In addition to the Rifle Association and its connections with Wimbledon, there also existed the Second Wimbledon Volunteers Battalion of the East Surrey Regiment.

The Wimbledon Bank is a fine addition to any collection and since there are only three known to have turned up so far it offers quite a challenge to the mechanical bank collector.

PROGRAMS UNLIMITED

By LOIS SPRINGER

During the winter months, when club groups are most active, bell collectors are often called upon to display and speak about their bells. Scarcely a month passes that this column does not receive a plea for assistance in planning such programs.

It is virtually impossible to answer each of these inquiries in detail, but over a period of time some of the most frequently asked questions have been noted; and by way of replying to them, we have rounded up suggestions from various persons experienced in programming with their bells. Perhaps their ideas will be of help to the many who have sought assistance through this column.

Q. Is it best to perfect a single bell talk and then use this when I am called upon to show my bells, or do most collectors who give programs work out a special talk for each group to whom they speak?

A. Most collectors, you will find, compromise somewhere between these two extremes. In other words, they have a certain trend to their talk but this is flexible so that the emphasis can vary from group to group. To quote from a prominent St. Louis collector: "I have my collection of 1450 bells in groups, for talks to various organizations. For instance, I emphasize religious bells for church groups; bells with flower associations for garden groups; patriotic bells for school programs; and bells selected for range of tone when I speak at the school for the blind."

Q. How many bells am I expected to carry to a program? I have heard that some take all their bells.

A. Whether a speaker could display all of his bells would naturally depend on how many are in his collection. Some do actually show several hundred bells; others, only a few dozen. The time element involved might help you determine the number of bells you should try to take for your program. Also, consider the amount of speaking material at your command. If your talk, in general, is not all that you might wish, showing a quantity of bells can compensate immensely.

Q. Do you know of any clever titles that others use in giving talks about bells? I find that program chairmen like something different by way of a title.

A. The titles used for programs are as varied as the people giving them. To some extent your titles depend on your whole approach to the subject of bells. For example, we know of a speaker in Virginia who uses the title BELLS FROM MANY LANDS because she stresses the geographical groupings of her bells. Another collector using the same theme calls his program A TINKLING UNITED NATIONS.

A speaker who takes only a bushel basket full of bells and concentrates on presenting each of these to her audience, cleverly titles her talk A BUSHEL OF BELLS. Another program where only twenty-five bells are displayed is aptly entitled A PICAL OF BELLS.

Q. After giving my first bell program I felt that it was too formal. What can I do to enliven my talk and bridge the gap between my audience and myself?

A. A Missouri doctor who frequently shows his bells to clubs claims that a bell talk is easy because it can be so informal. One of his favorite devices is to secure audience participation by passing an unusual bell around or by asking someone in the front row to come up and ring some particular bell. Allowing people to examine and ring certain rare bells will bridge that gap which worries you. Too, you might try to personalize your talk. Audiences expect an informative talk, but they appreciate the information more if it stems from your personal experiences. Tell them how you started your hobby, why it fascinates you. Point out the immense amount of history and romance to be found in individual bells. And give your audience interesting little sidelights on how you find your bells and your store of information. It is the individual bells and the stories behind them that appeal, rather than too much bookish history of bells in general.

Q. Since I carry about 200 bells with me for my programs, I always find it awkward re-packing them while the audience sits patiently waiting. I wonder how others manage in this respect.

A. Why not try conducting a question and answer period as you re-pack. We know of several who have adopted this procedure and found it completely to their liking. If your talk has been provocative, your audience will be eager to ask questions. Historically minded folks will welcome the opportunity of quizzing you on factual data that you may have avoided in your talk, lest you sound too ponderous.

Q. Now that I have been giving bell talks for eight years I find myself asked for "repeat" programs. I would like to do something to dramatize my talk and give it renewed interest for the sake of those who have heard it previously. Do you have any suggestion?

A. A. Not knowing the content of your usual talk, it is difficult to know what would add a bit of newness. But there are many means that collectors of our acquaintance use to dramatize their talks and lift them above the ordinary.

Some, if a record player is available, intersperse their comments with appropriate recordings of bell music. With a projector, colored slides can be shown. And there is an excellent film strip on the making of bells which can be had from Whittemore Company of Boston.

A California collector has found her audience interested in photographs and colored magazine pictures showing bells. These she fits into plastic pockets so that they may be passed around to illustrate her talk. Or how about planning with the program chairman, asking members of the audience to bring bells of their own to show at the close of your talk. If you are, or even if you are not, musically inclined you can always perfect a tune or two on a set of tuned bells. Musically-minded listeners may even accept an invitation to play a tune themselves!

A novel device used successfully by a prominent Ohio collector can best be quoted directly from her letter: "In my auditorium talk at a school on THE BELLS SPEAK, I had an alarm clock bell set for five minutes ahead of closing time. The children got quite a kick out of hearing it suddenly go off. I explained that the bell was speaking to me, and what it was saying."

All these suggestions make apparent the unlimited possibilities in planning a bell program. And we hope that some of the ideas, at least, will help those who have been perplexed in their planning.

And may we offer two final suggestions? If you are truly determined to make your bell talk interesting, make your ending superlative in whichever vein you decide to conclude, whether it be humorous or dramatic or convincing. And make the beginning equally superlative. Start out with your best attention-getter. Ask an arresting question, give an impressive quotation, ring a number of bells in rapid succession . . . anything to attract attention and lead into your theme, which should not be difficult to do with such a provocative subject as bells.

A question and answer period in reverse is a popular feature of many bell programs. Here the speaker quizzes his audience on various historic bells visited by them, and suggests others meriting a visit.

Because of its Okinawa background, the famed bell on the United States Naval Academy campus is much visited nowadays. This huge bell was brought from Okinawa by Commodore Perry after his expedition to Japan in 1854, and was later presented to the Naval Academy at Annapolis. A typical ancient temple bell, it was cast in Okinawa in 1456. Originally the bell was a votive offering to his people by the King of the Lew Chus, as an act of thanksgiving that its voice might bring continued peace to his people and freedom from barbaric invasions.

Today this beautiful bell is never rung except after a Navy football victory over the Army. After an Army game victory, the midshipmen ring the bell continuously until the team returns, at which time each team member, and finally the captain, beats out the score.

There has been only one exception to this custom and that was after our country's victory over Japan in 1945. On that occasion the Commodore Perry bell was given a tremendous ring, which cracked it forever more.

World War II did, however, add a happier and more romantic chapter to the life of this bell when the Navy brought over its sister bell from Okinawa in 1945. In ancient days these two bells hung side by side, it is believed. Now, though brought over 90 years apart, the two are again together, both being permanently enshrined on the Naval Academy campus.

Any note of humor that can be introduced in your program is always welcome. Some amusing transaction in buying a bell, perhaps, or lacking this, you can make a point of showing a bell associated with an amusing legend. One of these is the silver wedding-cup bell from Nuerenburg, Germany, and it always provokes a laugh. The full skirts of the woman in bridal array form one cup and the other is the acorn shaped cup she holds aloft. At the wedding ceremony the two cups are filled with wine. The groom drinks from the larger one at the same time the bride sips from the smaller one. As the old legend goes, if no drop of wine is spilled, mutual wedded bliss awaits the pair. But if one of the individuals has the misfortune to spill a drop of wine, he or she must expect to be ruled by the more capable partner who drinks from the wedding-cup bell without spilling a drop.

SPOON NEWS

By LOUISE CIRILLO

The Bronze Infantryman

The BRONZE INFANTRYMAN, a spoon by the Watson company which carries an added marking, "bronze;" this coloring of the metal will account for its darkish appearance in the photo. The figure is that of a World War I soldier; at his feet is a small shield and below it a ribbon lettered with our Country's Motto, "E Pluribus Unum." This spoon is from the collection of the "Tennessee Robin," Mrs. Mary Anderson, and covers a wide variety of subjects which include trade and premiums, historicals, the Wallace Zodiacs, children's spoons including nursery rhymes which are of special interest to her, and those having a religious motif, to mention a few. This latter category has received some interesting additions this past year from their trip abroad which included a trip to the Holy Land.

The specific style and design of this bronze spoon with its definite sharp-line-appearance, seems to be the one type that survived when a lack of interest developed and a majority of companies ceased production of souvenir spoons altogether. Many interesting subjects are to be found depicted ONLY on this type; they are desirable for this very reason, as the events were during a period when the souvenir spoon almost became a "thing of the past." Spoons of this type now added to a collection may serve to represent a trend that found favor with the manufacturers as costs of labor and materials increased and public interest lagged. A continuing renewal of interest in collecting may eventually bring back a more competitive market and a return to the intricate and more ornately decorated spoon that seems to be preferred by most collectors.

The PEACE SPOON—it will serve to illustrate the interest and value to be found in a plated spoon; there are no markings to tell who was responsible for its issuance to commemorate our Armistice Day, (now known as Veterans Day.) Along the reverse handle is the lettering that states "ARMISTICE ENDING WORLD WAR, SIGNED NOV. 11TH, 1918." Hostilities were brought to an end on that date at 5 A. M. The papers were signed by the Germans in a railway dining car in the Forest of Compiègne near the town of that name, not far from Paris. It was in this same car, and on the same spot, that France signed the German-Dictated Armistice on June 22, 1940, when they officially withdrew from World War II. The date 1918 is shown on the center stem and at the crown end are crossed banners with Dove of PEACE; its banner and laurel spray depicted below.

This spoon is from the outstanding collection of sterling spoons in Houston, Texas, that has been assembled by Miss Jerry Garrett; although this one is of silverplate, it was added for its historical significance. She is one of the few collectors who has diligently collected a full set of the demi tasse State seals that have embossed bowls showing scenes of their capitols. Several Southern and New England States are proving quite difficult to find.

WITH THE SPOON COLLECTORS

So many interesting spoons and bits of news have been brought to our attention recently that I feel justified this time, in sharing some of it with you. All will remember the previous articles on spoons by Marie Tuck that have been featured in HOBBIES from time to time. She writes that her summer vacation was again spent with her Aunt, Mrs. Floy Mitchell of Boca Raton, Fla., and that again, she had the time to "take pen in hand"—am sure that Marie and Floy will be coming up with some interesting and informative material on spoons for all of us in the near future!

The "find of the summer" for the Hoegsberg collection in Oakland, Calif., was a caddy-type spoon with a round bowl, having for its wide handle two large figures of trumpeters using the "Lurs of Denmark." Neils and Helen are now in the process of translating the story of the Lurs—a highlight, when completed, that is to be shared by all of us.

Adela Anderson of Lafayette, Ind., reports on two spoons found at a recent show in her area; one is in plate with no marks, that features "Robert Treat," an early Colonial Governor of Connecticut. (1st of these that we had heard of) and another in sterling with quite a large bust of "Andrew J. Still" in its bowl. The caption read, "Founder of Osteopathy—Kirksville, Mo." (the autograph was just below his likeness). Its handle was devoted to an Indian motif that featured a 2½" figure of an Indian Warrior with the upper part of his body in bronze; ears of corn were used as the fill-in design!

Monaco has been much in the news this past year and from Tulsa, Okla., Ethel Randolph writes of two outstanding MONTE CARLO spoons in enamel work that were recently added to the Randolph growing collection. One is topped by an open-work circular end with a "fan" of cards through its center; the bowl, a well executed scene of the Casino. The other has for its end a movable roulette wheel with a large good-luck clover leaf; the bowl scene is that of a rail fence, and of all things two pink pigs! A spoon in our collection features the seal of Monaco at its crown end with a coffee bean as its support the handle and bowl is a finely detailed "stem and leaf"—it would be interesting to learn just WHAT significance "pink pigs and coffee beans" might have for that particular locality.

That's all for this time. Hope to see you next month with some interesting spoons that feature "Holly for Xmas."

CIRCUSIANA

By DANA STEVENS

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Q: Just how much does it cost a circus to operate?

A: Cost, of course, depends on the size and type of circus. It is estimated, for example, that it takes something like six weeks of tryouts to get the Ringling Show on the road each year at a cost of one million dollars. I think it has been estimated that daily expenses for this show amount to something like twenty thousand dollars a day.

Q: Are all the side-show attractions with a circus the genuine article?

A: Yes. The days of buncombe on the midway are over. You'll even find that the Hawaiians are genuine, with real imported music and authentic hulas.

Q: Is hot, sunny weather the best time for a circus?

A: It is commonly thought so, but such is not always the case. Either extreme means bad business in most instances. When it has been too cold or too hot it has proved out that business is always light.

Q: Who first thought up the idea of driving stakes by machine?

A: I think that honor must go to a man by the name of Jack Snellen, who traveled for many years with the Ringling Show.

Q: I have a picture of a "Major Mite," who traveled with the Ringling Side Show. Do you know when this was?

A: It may have been in the late Twenties or early Thirties. Major Mite was less than 30 inches tall and weighed about 25 pounds. He had a brother who was six feet tall, and his parents were normal in height.

Q: What do circus wild animals eat?

A: The staple food for the lion, tiger, panther, leopard, and hyena is raw chuck beef with the fat removed. A tiger can eat something like fifteen pounds at a meal. The lion is the second biggest eater and will consume something like twelve pounds of meat.

The other three animals eat about five pounds of meat apiece. For variety the cat animals are given mutton and veal. This kind of diet is ideal, of course. Many shows simply feed their animals horse meat and let it go at that.

Q: Did the Ringling Show have two sea elephants at one time?

A: Yes. One was displayed on the show and the other was kept in reserve in the winter quarters at Sarasota. They were both called Goliath.

Q: When did the John Robinson Show become the property of John Ringling?

A: I think that it was in 1929 that John Ringling bought the John Robinson Show along with four other shows of the American Circus Corporation.

Q: Is the Seils-Sterling Circus still active?

A: Unfortunately no. It was organized in 1919 in Sheboygan, Wisconsin, and opened its first season on May 4, 1920. It closed at the end of the 1937 season. It was a truck show that had 37 trucks in its last year, and a personnel of 185.

Q: Can you tell me anything about the King Bros. Circus?

A: The King Bros. Circus was organized in 1910. The Kings were one of the many brother combinations attracted to the fascinating circus business. In their posters and ads, the King Brothers always boasted of the intelligence of its "wonderful troupe of performing dogs."

Q: In the Museum of the American Circus in Sarasota, Florida, I took a picture of a parade wagon called the five something. Can you help me out?

A: It was probably The Five Graces. It was built in 1878 by the Sebastian Wagon Works in New York for Adam Forepaugh. It was acquired by the Barnum and Bailey Circus in 1896, and used in their European tours from 1897 to 1902. After the Barnum show was acquired by Ringling Brothers, this wagon was used by the new owners, then in Hagenbeck-Wallace parades in 1934. It was last seen in the Ringling spectacle of 1943.

Mechanical Music

By SILVIO A. BEDINI

In the minds of most people, Switzerland is associated with mountain climbing, yodelling perhaps, and with the manufacture of fine watch movements. To the watch and clock collector, however, it is the land of the musical clock and the music box, for it is truly in Switzerland that mechanical music in all its forms had its greatest development.

Although the musical clock and the music box is generally considered to be a product of the early 19th Century, its origin is to be traced to a much earlier period, and even to such instruments as the Hydraulus or 'water organ' of the Roman era. Early references to musical timepieces in horological literature include descriptions of water organs and similar devices in the works of Salomon de Caus, Father Athanasius Kircher and Gaspar Schott in the 17th Century. It was not until the 18th Century that mechanical music as we know it was described in published form. One of the earliest such references that can be found is a description of a harp clock in which hammers operated by a pin barrel struck strings, which was described by Johann Halle in 1762.

In spite of the fact that the application of musical devices to timepieces was considered fairly early in the history of timekeeping, few of the examples which have survived to the present day date before the late 18th Century.

Probably the earliest musical timepiece now in existence is a house clock made by N. Vallin in 1598. This English clock is weight driven and regulated by balance wheel and plays a tune on thirteen bells at each quarter.

It was not until the middle of the 1700s that musical clocks and watches engaged the interest of clockmakers to any considerable degree. In England, Christopher Pinchbeck, the inventor of the alloy which bears his name, devoted himself to the production of musical automata and he advertised elaborate pieces of this type as early as 1721.

An outstanding British master of the art was James Cox of London who produced many costly toys in the form of clocks and watches during the last quarter of the 18th Century, many of them designed and destined for potentates of the Orient. Himself a fine mechanic, Cox employed outstanding artists to execute the cases of his timepieces. One of his most famous creations was the cage of birds with automata, an eight day musical clock and countless additional embellishments of the jeweler's art. Among other renowned English makers of musical timepieces were Francis Perigal, Markwick Markham and James Evans, to name but a few.

The creation, and later production, of musical clocks and watches seemed to center itself in Switzerland during the latter half of the 18th Century, however. J. Robert produced elaborate pieces in Neuchâtel and later his sons, David and Louis, followed in his steps. At the same time the Jaquet-Droz family and other craftsmen of Locle and Chaux-de-Fonds produced intricate musical timepieces with automata which are the classics of today. The work of these masters gave rise to the creation of an industry of which the standard product became the chiming musical clock which played several tunes per hour automatically or at will, in addition to incorporating striking work and such special features as trains playing tunes on bells, tympanon, harpsichord or flute. These were generally encased in rich cases of the Louis XV style, adorned with chased and molded bronze ornaments, tortoiseshell marquetry on metal gilt, and other refinements of the decorative arts.

It was not until about half a century later that the pin barrel was introduced. This consisted of a cylinder carrying short steel pins to actuate the musical 'comb' of the train. This invention is ascribed to Antoine Favre of Geneva, who described it as a method of making "chimes with neither bell nor hammer." This device was adapted to the construction of music boxes, which is today one of Switzerland's leading industries. The development of the music box reached its peak with the 'cartels' which consisted of large units with multiple sets of reeds. The cylinder device was constructed in every size for concealment in every type of container ranging from the tiniest little music box to be contained in a lady's watch, snuff box and even in a watch key, to such elaborate pieces as the "Lady Musician" created by Droz. Mechanical music flourished throughout Europe, and every form of jewelry, toilet article and many other more impersonal items were made to do service as producers of music.

Some of the world's foremost musicians who lived during this period became interested in mechanical music, including Bach, Haydn, Beethoven and Mozart. Near the end of the 18th Century this last-named mentioned in a letter that he had just agreed to write an adagio for a clock-maker.

Among the greatest creations in the form of musical clocks must be ranked the two pieces produced by Ludwig Knaus the elder and Ludwig Knaus the younger, in Austria during the 18th Century.

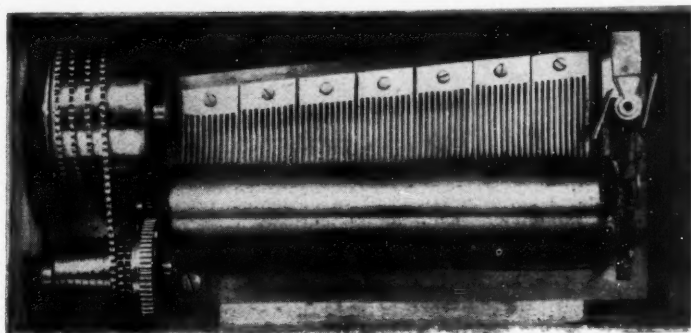

The first of these was the Knight or Tournament Clock produced by Ludwig Knaus the father. This was an elaborate clock encased in a marquetry case of the Louis XV style and included a carillon of nineteen bells. The outstanding feature was a group of automata which appeared before the dial and the mechanisms which operated it, consisting of a system of cams and rollers and disks set into motion by the pull of a cord. As the tableau began two soldiers raised their lances to signal that the action had begun; folding doors rolled back to unfold the scene of the tournament, followed by the appearance of heralds on horseback and the entrance of the knights themselves. Four complete jousts took place at four separate posts. As the tournament ends, the knight pierces and cuts off the head of a Turk, and this act is repeated with three other heads successively.

The second clock was the creation of Ludwig Knaus the son. It was famous as the great Coronation Clock and it depicts in miniature the coronation ceremony of the Empress Maria Teresa of Austria and her husband. The clock was commissioned by the Landgrave of Hesse and it required seven years to complete, and it was presented to the Imperial couple on the fifth anniversary of their coronation. The case is decorated with solid silver applications on a tortoise shell background in the elaborate style that was fashionable in mid-18th Century Austria. The central feature is a framed tableau where the automata is to be seen, surmounted by a timepiece, which has a crown wheel and verge movement.

The action is begun by the pull of a cord, which opens a curtain to reveal an open space featuring a smoking altar. The Emperor enters from the left and the Empress from the right and then the action follows step by step an enactment of the actual coronation ceremony. A very large clock movement is required, consisting of three sets of wheelwork, including one for the timepiece another, for the striking work and a third set for the music and automata. The carillon is exected on forty-nine bells and the cylinder has a repertoire of six melodies, consisting chiefly of hymns. The melodies are changed by hand. Other tunes can be played on a keyboard placed in the base which operates twenty-nine supplementary bells. Two more bells are used to sound the hours and quarters, making a total of eighty bells in all, which operate during the course of the tableau which requires twelve minutes to complete.

The story of mechanical music and of music boxes has been told several times before. Among the standard works on this subject is John E. T. Clark's little book of Music Boxes published in Birmingham, England, in 1948 and Roy Mosoriak's The Curious History of Music Boxes, published by the Lightner Publishing Corp., Chicago, in 1943. (Copies are available from HOBBIES).

In addition to these two fine works, there is a new and extremely comprehensive volume which was published last year in Lausanne by the Journal Suisse d'Horlogerie et de Bijouterie, from which these illustrations were taken. This is the work of the well-known horological historian, Professor Alfred Chapuis and is entitled Histoire de la Boite Musicque et de Musique Mecanique ("A History of the Music Box and of Mechanical Music"). It is distributed by Overseas Publishers Representatives at 66 Beaver Street in New York City as well as from dealers in horological books. Attention of our readers is directed to this particular work because for the first time in a book about the music box is the subject of musical timepieces given a comprehensive study for the collector as well as the scholar.

Which Early Doll Represents Queen Victoria?

By CLARA HALLARD FAWCETT

There has been a great deal of speculation as to which of the china-headed dolls made in the early years of her reign really represents Queen Victoria of England. It is well known to collectors that twelve such dolls were made and presented to each of her ladies-in-waiting. Some students of dollology say that the head which represents the young Queen is the china-head with coiled braids worn like a halo about the head, but this was not a popular hairdo of the Queen; others say it is the head shown in photograph a, and as far as coiffure is concerned, the supposition sounds reasonable, but the doll seems to have been in existence before Victoria was crowned. As far as the writer knows, the only china doll head which bears any real resemblance to Victoria is the one owned by Mrs. Charles Warren of Weston, Conn. See accompanying illustrations.

A study of the pictures reveals the same cast of the eyes, nose and mouth, and this head looks more like the young Queen than any of the other so-called Victoria dolls. Compare these illustrations with that of the painting by W. C. Ross published in 1841 and republished during the year of the Queen's Golden Jubilee, 1897, in a booklet entitled "The Queen, Twelve Early Portraits of Her Majesty." The long, sloping shoulders of the doll, so like Victoria's, are the same as other old china dolls of the period, but the marks inside the head indicate that it was made by the King's Porcelain Manufactures, a distinction which sets it apart from the ordinary doll. Victoria, it is stated, had these twelve dolls made especially for her. Whether workmen at the factory made any heads for themselves is not known, but it is more than likely.

Mrs. Warren says that her doll is reputed to have crossed the Delaware and Hudson Canal at Port Jervis on the first canal boat with the original owner, and that it was purchased from a direct descendant. There is a pink caste to the china. The doll has brown hair, blue eyes and a delicate red eyelid line. Marks inside the head are illustrated here.

One of the interesting phases of doll collecting is the study of the times represented by the doll in question. When the portrait doll of Victoria appeared the children of working men, especially those in large towns, had no money to spend for dolls. It was a period of transition of industry, and although the Queen promptly set about to alleviate conditions, reformation takes time. Hundreds of thousands of hand-loom weavers were being displaced by machinery and hand-loom weavers earned less than the equivalent of 5 cents a day.

From Spencer Walpole's History, IV, p. 363, we find that children "fought each other in the streets for offal which rich men do not allow their dogs to touch. A labourer was seen standing over a gentleman's swill-tub, voraciously devouring the wash intended for the pigs. Twenty women came to a farmer and begged him to let them dig up the dead body of a diseased cow that had been buried thirty-six hours before as being unfit for human food. Starving men, women and children eagerly picked up the vilest refuse that would enable them to eke out their miserable lives." The vast improvements in all walks of life, and also in the status of women during the reign of Queen Victoria is well known to history.

America, too, was having a period of great unrest at this time, although she may not have been as hungry as the mother country. John Tyler, Vice-President under Harrison, who had suddenly been elevated to the position of President by Harrison's death, was a most unpopular political figure, the feeling augmented by his veto of the Bank Bill. This so outraged those who had elected him to the Vice-Presidency that he was hissed and abused and even burned in effigy. His whole cabinet resigned with the exception of Daniel Webster. Then when he married for the second time twenty-year-old Julia Gardiner, daughter of ex-Senator Gardiner who had two years previously met a tragic death on an official boat trip up the Potomac, his unpopularity knew no bounds. Although the public had liked Julia Gardiner and had sympathized with her when she was made both motherless and fatherless, they did not fancy one so young as mistress of the White House. However, in spite of criticism there were many admirers of her beauty, charm and grace of manner, and the commendable discharge of her duties as the wife of the President, and Tyler's eight months regime ended with one of the most brilliant and well attended balls ever given at the White House. Despite tribulation Julia had a wonderful time as First Lady of the Land. And England's Queen, only two years older than Julia, was making progress, although her troubles, too, were many.

This was not "the golden age of the doll," for the buying public was much smaller than in later more prosperous times, but the dolls that were made then are interesting and scarce, and any collector who has one, feels she has made a lucky "find".

IN REVIEW

In this the 25th anniversary year of HOBBIES we take stock of many things and the wonderful achievements that have transpired in the entire field of collecting. Included in this span of time is the upsurge of button collecting. Reviewing some of the past issues we have run across some interesting thoughts from earlier issues of our Button Department:

Anna Nay, a Missouri collector, wrote in our August issue of 1939.

"I wonder how many of the younger generation ever saw a button ring? Button rings were popular some years ago among those who could not buy good jewelry. When I was a child 70 years ago there were no ten cent stores, so those who liked the cheaper lines of jewelry made their own rings.

"The method was this. Take a rubber button such as was used in men's clothes. Burn a hole through the center with an iron rod smaller than the finger. Then take a rat-tail file (round) and file inside until the hole is smooth and large enough for the finger. The result was a neat looking ring, and with care it wore for years."

HOBBIES Magazine for November, 1940, wrote:

"To Michigan goes the honor of being the first to organize a state button society."

Bertha Dennett, Washington State, wrote in the December, 1940, issue of HOBBIES:

"I had scanned many newspapers to learn if my late father's childhood home in the County of Sussex, England, had been bombed but obtained no information. In the October issue of HOBBIES, I read on page 25, 'The button comes from Sussex in the south of England where the Germans have been carrying out extensive raids.' This proves how extensive the knowledge of a collector is! Thank you."

A little more on the humorous side of the angles of button collecting, are these comments by Evelyn G. Wildman of Ohio, in the same issue:

"Perhaps my fellow button box bandits would appreciate this little tale. Recently a very gracious lady said that I might have all the old buttons from her button box. Among others were two huge Pierrot and Pierettes. Seeing my delight at the two buttons she told that at one time they had a great many of that kind and that when her brother was a boy he had made a collar for his pet goat by fastening together a solid row of them. I doubt very much if the goat appreciated his collar as would some of us.

"We enjoy the practicability of HOBBIES in giving us prices and values on antiques and buttons."

Hooked Rugs Yesterday & Today

By ETHEL HALL BJERKOE

In our country today, many homes are decorated and furnished in styles known as Early American and Colonial. This does not mean they exactly reproduce homes of those periods. It does mean that they are decorated and furnished in such a way as to provide the convenience and comfort demanded by present-day living but with an atmosphere suggestive of the period they represent.

It is doubtful if the Early American home of our ancestors, (from settlement until circa 1725) had much in the way of floor coverings but the Colonial home (circa 1725 until after the Revolution) certainly did. The prosperous homeowner of the Colonial years lived with much elegance and luxury—that is as much as was available to those of his social and economic status anywhere. The floors of his mansion were covered with Oriental rugs, at times with those of France. In the homes of the less prosperous, however, the floor coverings were often the handiwork of the housewife, herself.

Today the hooked rug, and to a lesser degree, the braided rug, has assumed an important role in the decorative scheme of the Early American and Colonial interiors. This is not alone because they are examples of the folkcraft of our ancestors and in many instances documentary history of this country, but because they add interest and charm. Fine old specimens, however, are increasingly difficult to secure and many homemakers of the present day are turning their artistry to this phase of homecraft.

William Winthrop Kent, the author of several books on the hooked rug believes the making of them began in the New World "possibly in the early and surely in the late eighteenth century, but not widely." He thinks it is possible that some were made even earlier. He also says there have been four so-called "revivals" of interest in the making of hooked rugs: the first in the early days of the nineteenth century before 1850; the second between 1850 and 1875; the third after World War I; and the fourth following World War II. Today this fourth period is continuing and the making of hooked rugs is one phase of a return to craft work in our country.

In the early days, the settlers usually drew their own patterns, copying some familiar and cherished object—an animal, a house, a ship on which some member of the family had sailed away; some simple geometric design; or a popular axiom with its illustrative picture. There was, also, the sentimental rug such as the "Home Sweet Home," or the very common and popular "Welcome" mat. These are all sought eagerly today for the home decorated and furnished in the Early American style.

For the simple Colonial-style interior, the housewife generally seeks for or makes the floral rug, beautiful in its range of colors and elegance of design.

Many fine old hooked rugs were made by the early French settlers in Quebec and Nova Scotia. It is even thought possible that the first hooked rugs in this country were made by these people and many of the French-Canadian rugs show a resemblance to the tambour work of France from which their makers had emigrated. The French - Canadian women used hand-spun material exclusively and clipped the hooked loops thus giving the rug a velvet-like appearance. They preferred the very ornate floral wreaths and floral scrolls, and it was they who raised the design above the background, making an extremely sophisticated rug.

It stands to reason that as rug-making in the colonies became popular, someone recognized the need of stamped patterns and realized that this was a money - making source. Soon designs of various kinds—good, bad and indifferent—were being stamped on burlap and peddled through the countryside. As this venture grew, designs became stereotyped and decreased in interest and quality.

Today, many rug-hookers are creating their own, or using the good old designs. Even the commercially stamped patterns are usually designed by competent artists. It is safe to say, I think, that in this continuing fourth "revival" of rug-making, many of the rugs being made today compare favorably with the best that have come down to us from an earlier time.

Lindeman's Singular Staffordshire Grill

"This started out to be a routine snack bar, where we could rustle up a sandwich or two, or some corn—the popping kind, during television commercials," says Joe Lindeman of the dominantly antique yet ultra-modern culinary casino that is his Staffordshire Grill.

Lindeman, a familiar name to HOBBIES readers, owns Lindeman's Antiques of Middletown, Ohio, whose unorthodox ads on page 9 of each issue have for many years been read with amusement. Although primarily a mail-order business, Lindeman's shop now occupies the entire first floor of the three-floor, 15-room residence built in 1891 by his grandfather Simon Goldman, a pioneer merchant. The original five-bedroom second floor has recently been apartmentized and comprises two bedrooms, drawing room, dining room and the Staffordshire Grill. On the third floor is Mr. Lindeman's "penthouse," in addition to accommodations for company.

The room in question originally was servants' quarters, second floor rear, and is a modest 9x14 feet in size. Last employee to occupy it was a cook, Lizzie by name, who eloped out the window one night many years ago. "Well, we finally concluded she wasn't coming back," Joe explains, "and then this snack bar notion presented itself. A small refrigerator, a sink, an appliance or two—toaster, grill, maybe even a frypan—why for a few hundred dollars we'd be in business."

That concept of the remodeling project, when compared with its realization provides about the same relationship in both cost and splendor that a 1929 movie on the late-late show bears to a 90-minute TV spectacular in color.

Basic in the planning which superseded the snack bar phase was a determination that the kitchen aspect must be subordinate. Thus, the conventional 4-inch splashboard back of the L-shaped counter was heightened to 15 inches and topped by an 8-inch shelf which provides eye-catching arrangements of early Staffordshire. The usual cabinets above were eliminated, while beneath the shelf are adjustable neon-equipped chrome lighting fixtures. The counter has a built-in wooden cutting board, and stainless steel sink with garbage disposal unit.

The birch cabinets are stained to match the simulated wood-grained formica top, backboard and shelf. They provide convenient storage for a whole battery of appliances which augment built-in surface units and grill. The roaster-oven is centered below a recessed archway of birch cabinets just to the left of the counter. Eight circuits are installed in this all-electric scullery, so the only fuse likely to blow is when Lindeman himself garbles the ingredients of a Gourmet recipe during one of his infrequent epicurean experiments. He has been known to substitute baking soda for baking powder without immediate awareness of any difference.

Along the wall opposite the work area is a cherry kitchen safe, a form of cupboard selected primarily for efficient space utilization. The pierced tin door panel design of classical columns lends dignity to this normally unpretentious style. Atop, a pot-metal eagle and chalkware owl watch protectingly over several blue Staffordshire pieces. The cherry dining table is a country type often referred to as a Pennsylvania work table, and the six signed Ohio Hitchcocks have their original decoration of grapes, melons and other fruits to add distinctiveness.

Important as these accessories may be toward achieving a kitchen without likely precedent, the coup de grace to conventionality is ensured by the monochrome murals. It seems reasonably certain that only Lindeman would think of putting a mural in a kitchen. And it is a tribute to the artistry of Mr. James Parker, the muralist commissioned to do the work, that his paintings in myriad shades of blue effectively mirror the mood of the hunting and sporting subjects depicted on the Staffordshire china which Lindeman uses daily with undeniable pleasure. An appropriate dark blue border frames the scenes and is, Lindeman will tell you, "sort of a Staffordshire potter's field, a medley of the shells of Wood, the scrolls of Hall, the flowers of Clews and the grapes of wrath. Unfortunately," he adds, "Parker cannot be sued for mural turpitude."

The 1820s appear to be the date of much of this ware which, although scarce, is not in great current demand. However, only a few of the potters making blue transfer-printed china with hunting scenes have been identified. Hall, of course, is well known for the Quadrupeds series which, strictly, is primarily animal portraiture in character. Pieces with the Clews impress are of somewhat lighter blue than others, but the action portrayed is magnificently detailed. Yet some of the most attractive hunting scenes found on Staffordshire are unmarked, their make unknown. Lindeman admires them all, and acquires wanted pieces as they become available.

"You know," Joe said late one night as he regarded with satisfaction his truly remarkable Staffordshire Grill, "if Lizzie had only come back. She would probably be tight asleep, or vice versa, right now. And over the garbage disposal unit, too. We may have lost a cook, but we have gained a cookery."

ANNOUNCEMENT! Because I am now specializing in so many fields besides Glass, space has become a serious problem, so that I am obliged to dispose of a large portion of my stock of EARLY AMERICAN PATTERN GLASS, in CLEAR & COLOR. You know of course, that each piece is GUARANTEED OLD & AUTHENTIC when you buy it here. The 150 patterns which I stock are all of the most popular and desirable ones shown in Lee and McKearin. Some will be discontinued; others will be thinned out, and each piece will be sacrificed at far below its present replacement value . . . a rare opportunity for dealers and collectors . . . ### Annual Event At Historic Alexandria, Va.

Historic Alexandria, Va., offers a four-day holiday week-end of pleasure for the antique lover and tourist, November 9, 10, 11, and 12. It is the occasion of the ninth annual antique show there, which will be attended by many prominent people from nearby Washington, D. C.

One of the most colorful and practical features of this annual event greets the visitor as he enters the Recreation Center. This is the early American snack bar with its checked cloths, pine furniture, copper and lustre ware, presided over by "barmaids" in bright pink, blue and yellow and white costumes such as those worn at historic Gadsby's Tavern during the Colonial era.

SPECIALIZING IN 19th CENTURY ART GLASS

All Types, All Prices—For Beginner or Connoisseur.

EVERYTHING OLD, AUTHENTIC AND PERFECT.

TOP ROW - ALL BURMESE

1. Covered Rose Jar (Burmese cover), especially lovely floral clusters; gold trim on cover, 5" h. x 4" w. Slight annealing line in cover, otherwise proof - $38.50.
2. Shade, 5" h. with lovely flared scalloped top edge - $24.50.
3. Vase quartrefoil-folded top, 4 1/2" high. Two short splits side by side in top edge, only 3/4" long - a rare Mt. Wash. Burm. darling, only $20.00.
4. Fairy Lamp, Webb Burmese (unsigned) in extra-rare SMALLER size edition of No. 17. (Clear S. Clarke shade holder).
5. Fairy Lamp, Webb Burmese (unsigned) also in extra-rare SMALLER edition of SIGNED and unsigned ones in this same style, shown on my front cover of Sept. 1949 HOBBIES; and also offered in my ads if and when I can ever find one for you.
6. Finger Bowl or Candy Dish, flared crimped edge 5 1/4" wide x 2 3/4" high - $22.50
7. Covered Syrup Jug - Lovely pale purple and yellow pansies; gold decoe on handle; hinged pl. silver cover, 6" h. x 8" w. - $62.50
8. and 10. PAIR of S & P Shakers. - The pair $37.50, or $19.50 each.
9. Vinegar Cruet with a dull satin finish yellow stopper (old) that matches and fits, but is NOT a Burmese stopper. Also: there is a short heat line 1 1/2" long at one side of handle, - no harm of course, but it does cut the price of this fine cabinet piece down to far less than half - yes, you can have this for only $45.00 (don't forget to add 75c or $1.00 for P.P. and Ins., otherwise I must ship Express Charges COLLECT, and those will cost you a LOT more than P.P.)

SECOND ROW:

11. & 12. PAIR of Vinegar Cruets, beautiful shade of transparent light honey-amber. The Dia. Quilling in this refracts the light so beautifully! Four-sided shape with a "dimple" in center of each panel and lovely pastel floral garlands in fine quality enamel; orig. hollow blown amber stoppers; amber handles; ea. $20.00, (7" h. to top of stoppers)
13. M. P. SATIN WATER TUMBLER, - rich rose to pink D.Q.

14. & 15. PAIR Cranberry Perfume Bottles, melon-ribbed, - matching orig. hollow-blown (decor.) stoppers; extra beautiful fine quality enamelled florals with wandering stems and leaves, mostly in a beautiful BLUE, white pink and gold! Finest quality, probably French. Overall height 5 1/4" each $28.50.

16. BURMESE SMALL FAIRY LAMP, clear Clarke base, 4" h. - $34.00.

17. DOUBLE-SIGNED! WEBB QUEEN'S BURMESE FAIRY LAMP - this large "Reversible" petticoat style (see Mrs. Tibbotts' book on Fairy Lamps) has several points of importance, - first, the matching 7 1/4" w. Burmese base has TWO full marks, - which is most unusual (Thos. Webb & Sons, Queen's Burmese Ware, Pat. AND S. Clarke Pat. Fairy); then it also has the extra-rare BURMESE SHADE HOLDER (and this has a sizable flat-flake chip UNDERNEATH its base where it is really no harm); and being "reversible", you can use this with that LUSCIOUS frilled Burmese base either right side up or upside down! Yes, it is expensive, - more for the advanced collector.

18. Webb Burmese Fairy Lamps - (I have two of these, - one signed and one unsigned), - a hard-to-find style with delightful turned-up back edge to the frilly Burmese base.

REMEMBER FOLKS . . . USE your Fairy Lamps for DELIGHTFUL HOLIDAY LIGHTING!

19. SET OF FOUR, RARE COLOR, MARY GREGORY CORDIALS or LIQUEURS in an extra-rare COLOR, - RUBY (not Cranberry); two boys - two girls in white; 3 3/4" h. x 1 1/4" w. tops. Fine old Sandwich hand blown quality - $48.00 the PAIR (boy and girl) - not sold singly.

20. SIGNED KEW BLAS 10" LILY VASE, fine solid iridescent, - made by Union Glass in Somerville, Mass. and now very hard to find, - 4 1/4" across the 3-petal top - $28.00

21. WEBB M.P. SATIN all-over beautiful BLUE 4" vase - scalloped top, $22.50 (striped pattern).

22. CORALINE M. P. SATIN 4" VASE - (D.Q. pattern) with most unusual Coraline designs in criss-cross lines! M. P. is unusual salmon pink to pale pink for advanced collector.

23. & 24. NEW ENGLAND PEACHBLOW (Cambridge, Mass.) fine old water tumblers dull Satin finish, deep rich rose to wh., - these are a real buy at $32.50, each.

25. MT WASHINGTON PEACHBLOW ribbed BOTTLE! Yes, this is the orig. faceted stopper, - (same style exactly as the BURMESE bottle and stopper next to it!) but lovely floral decoe on this RAREST of the PEACHBLOWS! Rich coloring too, - wild rose pink to very bluish white! Stopper is white. (Frankly, folks, I tucked this in among my beloved Burmese, just to see if you folks really READ all of my ad! But here it is for you, - that SMALL, (but expensive) gem in the most sought-after PEACHBLOW of all! and PROOF.

26. BURMESE Ribbed Bottle with orig. faceted Burmese stopper (the shank of stopper has been restored). Overall height 5 1/4" - $36.00.

27. BURMESE LAMP SHADE (orig. & gas shade) folks use these now (if they can find one) for a lamp shade - nothing wrong in that! This is a frilly beauty, - soft Mt. Wash. coloring (pink comes way down but is not a BRIGHT pink) - really beautiful with light shining through, - top frilly flare 8 1/4" wide; height 5 1/4"; bottom opening 3 1/4" w. - $35.00. (Set a smaller vase or bowl inside and use it for flowers!)

28. BON-BON DISH in hard to find Diamond Quilted Burmese, - and that luscious applied "lemon frosting" edge Soft Mt. Wash. coloring - $52.50. (You can see one like this in my own private collection of Burmese on front cover of HOBBIES for Nov. 1953).

29. & 30. PAIR MARY GREGORY 12" VASES - in that BEAUTIFUL rich SANDWICH BLUE, - lovely little girls in white; widest 3" diameter; real EYE-POPPERS; some slight signs of use in the gold-line trim, - otherwise breathtakingly beautiful!

Write me your wants in UNUSUAL Mary Gregory.

31. M. P. SATIN 9 1/4" EWER or PITCHER-VASE - 9" high to ruffled 3-cornered top, applied Camphor handle, - D. Q. in hand-some apricot to pale peach-pink - $36.50.

32. & 33. PAIR M. P. SATIN SUGAR SHAKERS, one rose to pink, - the other rich blue to pale blue; orig. pewter shaker tops; overall height 5 1/4", each $38.00.

NEW BOOK!

Bottle and Glass Handbook

The Volume Collectors and Dealers
Have Been Asking For!

Profusely illustrated with bottles of all ages, types and styles from Ancient Egypt and Persia to American flasks, character and bitters bottles.

The Bottle and Glass Handbook is the volume for you because it is a vast storehouse of information, not only on bottles, but tells how glass has been made through the ages. It answers hundreds of questions and gives you important facts about this fascinating subject. It will endow you with the background to talk or lecture on bottles and glass before clubs or other organizations; or, to intelligently discuss the subject with collectors and dealers.

PARTIAL CONTENTS

History of Glass - how it was first discovered and used.
How Glass Traveled - tells how glass spread over the world.
Glass Making - materials used, furnaces, tools, etc.
Molds - first molds; how they are used.
Bottle Making - process described from start to finish.
Bottle Design - principles, designs for specific uses.
Recipes - formulas for colors, glass, etc.

Geography of Bottles - shapes, sizes and styles used in different countries of the world.
Miscellaneous Items and Stories about bottles and their uses.
Sections - American historical flasks, Bitters Bottles, Character and Novelty bottles, etc.
Special - Small sections devoted to bottles of leather, pottery, metal, etc.
Pictures - Volume is filled with photos and drawing of all types and styles from all over the world.

XMAS GIFTS UP

This year, with costs inflated, what will you give friends that is still quality for a few dollars? If collectors like you, answer is simple, for we publish books on all Hobbies (see sample A). If interest in old things is ? ? , get picture packed stories of nostalgia (sample B).

A. COLLECTOR CLASSICS include China books by Wood, Freeman and Kamm. Each book is cloth bound and picture-packed, (some in color), together with marks identified and pattern's names. I. Majolica $2.50; II. Haviland Limoges $3.50; III. European China $2.50; IV. Iron - other order only $2. Cloth bound stone $2.50 and V. Hand-Painted (including how-to-do) $3.50. Kamm old China $3.

DOLL BOOKS: AMERICAN DOLLS researched by The Doll Collectors of America, Inc. in cooperation with Ruth Freeman, pictures and describes all at $3.

STILL MORE ABOUT DOLLS, Janet Johl's greatest book is a storehouse of information with 300 pages of pictures & text, beautifully bound, $5.

PAWCETT'S PAPER DOLLS serve a double purpose: collectors of real dolls see here a guide to costume while paper enthusiasts find this beautiful 250 pp. limited edition at $5.00.

LIGHT ON OLD LAMPS. Larry Freeman's classic now in its enlarged 5th edition and the standard authority brought up to date, $4.00. A few paper bound wartime editions just uncovered, $2.00 while they last. NEW YORK TIMES says: "writing a model of condensed clarity... the final word."

THE TOP FURNITURE HANDBOOKS cloth bound like all the rest and packed with pictures at only $2.50 each. 1. Victorian. 2. Primitive Pine. 3. Federal & Empire. 4. Period. The last two just out and special this month at only $4.00. Gold mines of information to take on travels or use in showing shop customers, and many others.

GLASS BOOKS. The Pitcher Book of Minnie W. Kamm, generally regarded as the outstanding works in the field. Century House is publisher and has the following titles in print.

No. 5, 6, 7 & 8, either sold at $2.00 each; No. 1, 2, 3, 4 at $1.50 each IN SETS only.

DON'T MISS IRIDESCCENT GLASS. A full account of everything from Aurene and Tiffany to Northwood, Quesel, Durand and even "Carnival" is contained in our newest book, by Dr. Larry Freeman. Very limited edition at $4.50 ppd. Tiffany catalog included for 50c more.

B. NOSTALGIA FOR FIRESIDE FUN: MERRY OLD MOBILES: over 50 years of cars. 1000 pictures and cartoons create each period in all its glory. $5.00.

STONEPOSTS IN SUNSET: Aging takes on fun meaning under pen of this writer for New Yorker and other magazines. Essays on the farm and retirement, beautiful print job, hard cover at only $2.00.

SMOKERS, CIGARS AND STICKERS - by S. R. LIT, called 'great gift for men', $2.75. CELEBRITIES, 50 years caricatures by Comment by artist J. M. Flagg, $3.00.

CIRCUS PARADES - called by BILLBOARD - "greatest ever" - in full color $10, and many others - send for catalog.

C. CAROLS BOOK FREE... repeating last year's sensation we offer our 20 page color booklet of songs, pictures and stories behind Xmas Carols free with an order of $5.00 or more.

News of the World's Antique Mart

VISITORS AT 1006 S. MICHIGAN

Mrs. Dorothy Chestnut of Montreal, Que., a new recruit to the collecting fraternity, spent some time at the Mart headquarters last month. Her collecting interests started recently when she purchased two Harmoniums, younger sisters of the melodeon.

* * *

The Wolbergs went all out for antique shows last month. They traveled first to Detroit for the Great Lakes Antique Show held in the Masonic Temple the early part of October. They also attended the Cincinnati Show Oct. 18-21, held in the Music Hall there and are present as usual at the Chicago Antiques Show in the Conrad Hilton Hotel.

* * *

George Dixon, former insurance man from Indianapolis, Ind., and long time collector and patron of the Mart has just purchased the Sir William Hotel, 7100 Biscayne Blvd., Miami, Fla. On a recent Mart visit, he found some Italian Renaissance furniture and objects of art to complement his own private collection which he has recently moved to Florida to furnish his home and hotel.

* * *

Mrs. William Etzel of Topeka, Kans., dealer and HOBBIES advertiser stopped in recently to greet her many friends on her recent visit and buying trip to Chicago. While here she was a guest at the home of Mrs. Rose Bryan Scott who was a former Mart dealer.

Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield recently announced that the Post Office Department will issue a special 3-cent Children's Stamp designed to promote friendship among the children of the world.

"It will be a symbol of the aspirations of all Americans who fervently hope for world peace in the years ahead, and will stress the fact that our children of today are the hope of the world tomorrow," Mr. Summerfield explained.

The date of issuance of the stamp, location of first day sale and other details were not completed at the time of the announcement.

The design for the new stamp accepted by the Post Office Department and carrying the slogan, "Friendship—The Key To World Peace," was selected by a committee from among designs submitted during a national competition by the grade school and high school children of the United States, its territories and possessions.

The winning design was submitted by Ronald Dias, 19, a former student of Roosevelt High School, Honolulu, Hawaii. He is now living at 3401 West Olive Avenue, Burbank, California.

Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield recently disclosed today that theft of mail from home boxes by drug addicts has become a major problem for postal inspectors.

The disclosure, Mr. Summerfield said, is contained in a report from Chief Postal Inspector David H. Stephens for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1956.

The report revealed Postal Inspectors caused an unprecedented total of 6,852 arrests for postal crimes during the fiscal year. (A total of 98.8 per cent of those brought to trial for their crimes were convicted.)

The 6,852 figure compares with 6,631 arrests in the previous 1955 fiscal year, itself a record year.

Of the total arrests in fiscal 1956, thefts from home mail boxes accounted for 3,113, or 48 per cent of the total.

The fact that drug addicts crazed for narcotics and needing money to get drugs accounted for many of these thefts is illustrated by reports from New York City inspectors showing that well over 35 per cent of those arrested for home mail box depredations were addicts.

The national increase in drug addiction has been paralleled by increases in home mail thefts in other areas of the nation also, he noted.

In some other important categories of postal crime for fiscal 1956, Mr. Summerfield reported that Postal Inspectors caused 470 arrests for burglary, 274 for mail fraud, 19 for holdups, 284 for forgery of money orders and postal savings certificates, 224 for sending obscene matter through the mails, 49 for theft of government funds and property, 17 for sending scurrilous or defamatory mail, 8 for sending poisons and 6 for sending explosives.

On September 18, Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield announced that a special 3-cent stamp, the last of the three stamps being issued this year to emphasize the importance of wildlife conservation in America, will be released at Seattle, Wash., on November 9, 1956.

The King Salmon, which is the subject of this issue, offers an outstanding example of the conservation work being carried on by Federal and State Governments. King Salmon continue to be very valuable commercial and sport fish in the United States and Alaska and they have been aided in their spawning migration upstream by fish ladders and elevators, and by elimination of log jams and high waterfalls.

The stamp is 0.84 by 1.44 inches in dimension, arranged horizontally with a single outline frame, printed by the rotary process, electric-eye perforated, and issued in sheets of 50. The color of the stamp will be green. The printing of 120,000,000 3-cent King Salmon stamps has been authorized.

The design depicts King Salmon on their annual migration upstream to the spawning ground. Across the top of the stamp, arranged in one line, is the wording "Wildlife Conservation," in dark modified Architectural Roman. To the left of the design, arranged in two lines, is the wording "King Salmon," in dark Gothic, and across the bottom of the stamp is "3c United States Postage 3c," in modified white face Architectural Roman. This design was reproduced from a drawing by Bob Hines, Artist of Fish and Wildlife Service, U. S. Department of Interior.

Stamp collectors desiring first day cancellations of the 3-cent King Salmon commemorative stamp may send addressed envelope, together with money order remittance to cover the cost of the stamps to be affixed, to the Postmaster, Seattle, Washington. An enclosure of medium weight should be placed in each envelope and the flap either turned in or sealed. The outside envelope to the Postmaster should be endorsed "First Day Covers."

SEVENTY YEAR OLD CLUB THE CHICAGO PHILATELIC SOCIETY

The oldest philatelic society in America, The Chicago Philatelic Society, is marking its seventieth anniversary on November 2, 3, 4 in the Congress Hotel, Chicago. William H. Schulze, exhibition chairman, 1826 W. Diversey Parkway, Chicago 14, Ill., has received entries from all over the country.

Richard W. Leach, president of the society, sailed for England on September 12 where had been invited to speak before the newly formed Great Britain Philatelic Society on his collection dealing with the "1934-36 Photogravure Issues of King George V."

Mr. Leach was invited also to speak in the London area on October 6, at the annual Conference of the Postal History Society.

He is scheduled to bring back with him from England a trophy which he will present as the President's Trophy to the Chicago Philatelic Society for its 70th Anniversary Exhibition.

AMERICANA PAGE

Dedicated to the memory of the founder of HOBBIES Magazine, O. C. Lightner, whose enthusiasm in spreading the cause of collecting and the cultural arts pertaining thereto, left us all a legacy of real beauty. By providing the means of bringing persons together under the mutual

O. C. LIGHTNER, Founder

bond of collecting, he enriched thousands of lives with the formation of new and enduring friendships.

And since by his every act he deserved the encomium of one of his friends, "a real American," we dedicate this the AMERICANA PAGE.

Cormorants in the Lincoln park zoo in Chicago during the nest building season began assembling the few sticks and twigs they could find. These nine year old birds, acquired as small fledglings, had never built a nest nor seen one built. But when an assortment of twigs and branches was made available to them they promptly built a standard type of cormorant nest some eighteen inches deep and twelve inches across, such as cormorants have been building for thousands of years.

Science, invention, and the various new deals, fair deals and miss deals of do-gooders have placed people in a sort of zoo that would seem strange to the pioneers of Americana. In spite of all planning by intellectuals and those who would put human nature in well regulated cages, we predict that from time to time the genus homo will assemble the sticks and twigs to rebuild its natural pattern of human nature.

A couple of small kids who should have been paddled may have a terrific impact on the history of our future. Eleven and thirteen years old, and never having ridden in a plane, these boys found the key in ignition of a small private plane, took the plane up for a spin over the town, buzzed low over their own homes, and returned to the field to make what a veteran flyer pronounced a perfect landing.

Where do we go from here?

A few years ago a boy a few years older did a sillier thing. He took a bottle of water, some sandwiches, a small plane, not as good as the boys used, and flew across the Atlantic Ocean. After Lindbergh, America rapidly passed out of the humorous stage of "Darius Green and his Flying Machine," and into the stage of "maybe it will be practical." We have continued to expand the "maybe it will be practical" stage through billions of dollars of engineering and research, improving the safety of multi-million dollar large mechanical marvels for the air, and a few small private planes. Are we now about ready to step out into the air?

Dangerous? Yes, positively dangerous! As dangerous as that period back in Americana when they actually proposed piping highly explosive gas right down the public streets of a town and right into the homes of people! As dangerous as when they strung electrical lighting on frail poles right through great masses of people! As dangerous as those iron horses that might take your breath away when traveling at more than thirty miles an hour! As dangerous as the feat of those earlier dare-devils who would sail completely out of sight of land on the theory that they now had a compass!

It is a dangerous, dangerous world, and "you ain't seen nothing yet!"

Suez has always been the sore thumb of the eastern hemisphere. Several generations of peaceful regular passage of shipping through the Suez Canal have lulled us to sleep on the terrible, turbulent history of that part of the world.

The Red Sea was another "wet ditch" that protected the stability and culture of ancient Egypt from most all of the waves of conquering armies that swept back and forth across the Middle East. Caesar and Marc Anthony knew that Egypt was the key to the "beyond," a point that Alexander the Great had apparently overlooked, even after founding Alexandria. Columbus sailed west to reach the "Indies" because the short caravan routes along the Red Sea, and the long caravan routes across the Middle East had been closed to Western trade for centuries by an intense Arab "nationalism" based on religious fervor.

The Sphinx and the pyramids for centuries have looked down on the worldwide political turmoil arising out of this little stretch of wet sand pinched in between the great oceans and seas of the world. For awhile the most powerful nation in the world used this narrow, pinched-in channel as the major life line of an empire. To the modern world Suez has become a part of the seas of the world. The principle of "freedom of the seas" has been applied to it.

A small dictator, encouraged by a great dictator, has grasped this narrow key to history in his small hand. ing.

Anything can happen. History is sure to be made.

The world has gone back to barter, using gold only as a sort of step-mother to its financial system. Since gold front teeth and large watch chains went out of fashion gold has become a sort of antique.

In the field of antiques, gold was of great importance. Chemically sluggish it did not rust or oxidize into dust. It could be brightly polished again and again for ages. It was soft and easy to shape in many designs. It could be spread in a thin leaf or wash. It gave a brilliant color to glass and various glazes. But most of all it was a compact, small medium of exchange in the days when no one trusted paper for money or finance.

The Forty-Niners and the "Gold-bugs" of earlier Americana would marvel at what has happened to their precious metal in the modern world. Paper and cables have taken over its monetary job. Much of the monetary gold of the world is in Fort Knox and the Federal Reserve Bank vaults of the United States.

We do not "own" all of this reserve gold since the United States has become "banker" for the world. Much of it could be claimed on demand by foreign claimants holding dollar money or dollar exchange. But these foreign "depositors" feel that their money is safer here in the "bank" than it would be at home within the range of bomber squadrons or local rebellions.

This twenty-two billions of monetary gold in the American "bank" is small potatoes compared with the business and industry it serves in the world. There are some 20,000 tons of it worth $560 a pound. But it is heavy stuff, and if you had it in one solid cube you could set it all down in your front yard or your back yard without disturbing the rose bushes.

Commerce and industry are based on confidence and understanding, not on gold or any other money. As modern America begins to play a leading role in the world we must all realize that our prime objective in the world is to build confidence and understand-

25th Anniversary Year

ANNIVERSARY THOUGHTS

"GREAT OAKS FROM LITTLE ACORNS GROW"

Wyoming—My wife and I left Casper, Wyo., about June 8, heading south and east. We spent some time in Nashville and Memphis, Tenn.; Atlanta, Ga.; St. Augustine, Fla.; New Orleans, La.; Vicksburg and Natchez, Miss.; Kansas City, Mo.; and Denver, Colo. We saw many, many very interesting things, both natural and man-made wonders. Among the most interesting was the Lightner Museum of Hobbies in St. Augustine. It is indeed a castle of wonder and magnificence. I was greatly surprised at the quality and the great quantity of items. Also surprised at the great number of tourists who were viewing the museum. I can recall when it started some years ago, and as I wrote in the book there, "Great Oaks from little acorns grow." In Nashville, Tenn., I saw one of the greatest collections of Indian artifacts in existence, that belonging to Dr. Hugh Young. He has a fine private museum. I saw the homes and tombs of Lincoln, Mark Twain, Jesse James, all unforgettable, as is the Lightner Museum. All of you who had a part in its growth can be very proud of it.—Virgil Y. Russell.

OUR FRIEND THROUGH THE YEARS

Texas—May I add my wishes for the continued success of one of my very favorite magazines. I've been a subscriber for years, and have filled in my file with early numbers from old magazine and book shops in Chicago and Dallas. Am looking forward to visiting the World's Antique Mart soon, and I hope to make the Chicago Show in October. You are so right "A friend once lost cannot be regained." So here is my check again. I do not want to lose this friend.—Pauline Glover.

"A NEW YEAR of HAPPINESS"

Colorado—It was gracious of you to take time from your busy lives to remind me that another year of pleasure with your wonderful magazine had passed; and it was again time to pay for a new year of happiness. How could I forget after twenty years of subscribing to HOBBIES. It wouldn't be possible. A pleasant and prosperous anniversary year to each of you, and happy collecting to each reader of your excellent magazine.—Kate W. Blair.

CONTACT MADE

Iowa—Congratulations on your 25th anniversary. Yes, I like your magazine very much as I am a collector and dealer. Have made many nice contacts in regard to pattern glass and sold some rare pieces as well as other antique articles. — Mrs. K. Ansley.

READERS SINCE, 1931

Iowa—Congratulations on your 25th anniversary. Our subscription to HOBBIES has been almost unbroken from the time that we sent in a subscription to the "Philatelic West," and got HOBBIES (HOBBIES took over the Philatelic West), which was evidently in 1931.—Mr. and Mrs. T. N. Fosse.

MEMORIES

Michigan—Dear HOBBIES folks: Enclosed find renewal check. I just can't be without this magazine. I want to congratulate you on your 25th anniversary. I found an old HOBBIES, Dec. 1932, in my attic recently. Thumbing through it I ran across my ad. I love everything about this magazine. — Maybelle C. Hunn.

FROM O. C. LIGHTNER'S PUBLISHER'S PAGE.

People talking of traveling, often say to me, "you're lucky." That makes me madder than a wet hen. I have always been a hard worker and I work yet. I have had my share of sleeping in parks and flop houses. I realize it would not take much to put me in the parks again. The hardships of youth, the fear of poverty in old age or a breakdown of health, has kept my feet on the ground, free from debt, and the will to live within my means. The depression has cut us all to our stature. In my own experience the leveling process has brought men who once looked down on me to seek favors from me. The proud of yesterday, often creatures of luck or inheritance, are humbled before the fickle Goddess of Change. Many, lacking resourcefulness in their makeup, will slide further down. Some will come back. But mostly it will be new and unheard of leaders who seize the standard, men molded in the white heat of genuine ability where luck played small part. But never tell a man who has run the tough gauntlet of experience that he is lucky. It makes him raving mad.

September, 1932

Our newest national park was my last to visit. Stories of its glories have filtered through from its inaccessible reaches for several decades until five years ago the Union Pacific built near to it and the government opened its scenic roads to that Thanatopsis in Southern Utah where countless thousands will journey in the years to come.

There is no need to make comparisons with the incomparable. Grant all the other parks the splendor that is theirs. Let words of praise roll over the falls of Niagara or Yellowstone or Bridal Veil; let descriptions beggar the grandeur of Glacier, of Rainier, of Yosemite; let superlatives fall from the Canyon's brim, or echo from the Royal Gorge. Praise if you will your Thousand Islands, your Shenandoah Valley, your White Mountains, your Chickamauga!

Give them all their dues, let the writers and the orators rise to their greatest heights—they can never rise to the heights of Zion.

It is no wonder they called it Zion. The Almighty stopped to paint it during those six busy days of creation and left a handiwork of color in that sublime spot unparalleled, methinks, in all the worlds of the universe.

Where else can one make friends with lofty grandeur—touch the garments of giants that rise precipitously thousands of feet above them? Where is there a spectacle to compare with the Great White Throne flanked with the towering lofts that house unearthly choirs?

Its most attractive phase is the fact that visitors feel a hominess in its delightful canyon floor as if to blend the beauties of life with the stupendous mysteries of the firmament.

In the plan of Zion is also included the wonderful Bryce Canyon, the most colorful work of nature and Cedar Breaks, from which place, looking toward Zion thirty miles away the visitor beholds a sight nearer approaching visions of Heaven than you will ever see until you close your eyes in death.

The Clustered mountain spires rise in the sun-glinted haze like the Holy City of Jerusalem. Here the meanest citizen, the crudest of mind, must certainly feel the hallowed spark that divined Harriet Beecher Stowe's inspired words: "Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord."

I do not sing, but if I did I would never cease to sing of the beauty of Zion; I do not shout, but if I did I would stand at Bryce's brink and shout her glories to the world; I do not weep, but if I did I would weep for leaving; I do not pray, but if I did I would pray that the Zion of the hereafter be as wonderful to behold as the Zion here.

Money of Yesteryear

By CHARLES FRENCH

The Maundy Money sets of England are unique in numismatic history. Records indicate that the practice of giving out Maundy coins commenced under the rule of Edward II who ruled from AD1307 to AD1327. Maundy gifts are first mentioned under his reign.

On the day preceding the first good Friday, Jesus Christ washed the feet of his Disciples and commanded them to do likewise. Therefore the day is called Maundy Thursday. This custom of washing feet was quite common in Medieval times, being constantly practised by royalty, nobles, and the clergy, usually on the poor. Gradually the practice of giving gifts of food and silver pennies to those whose feet were washed became prevalent. Today, the English rulers still give out Maundy coins; they do not, however, wash the feet of the poor any more. James II was the last on record to resort to this practice. Around 1662, with the coining of money greatly changed due to the newly invented mill presses, coins of baser value than the sixpence ceased to be made of silver for general circulation. Groats, three-pence, half groats and pennies were still struck but for Maundy distribution only.

The ceremony of giving out Maundy coins consisted of a divine service attended by poor men and women. The number of each was to equal the age of the sovereign. Bread, meat and fish were distributed in large wooden bowls, and a procession was formed by the ruling monarch's deputy, with other officers who wore white scarfs and sashes. They carried a large, gold dish upon which there was placed red and white kid bags containing the Maundy money. One of these bags was presented to the person selected to receive the royal bounty. The amount being one penny for each year of the king's age.

There is some question as to whether all silver pieces of smaller denomination than the sixpence were struck for Maundy money purposes.

Up until 1729 or 1731, the penny was the only coin struck and given out for Maundy purposes; after that date 4 pence, 3 pence and 2 pence pieces were also given out.

All four denominations have ceased to circulate as currency. While the Maundy coins are legal tender and have a right to pass in circulation, they rarely do so.

Today, it is generally conceded that the term Maundy money should apply to the 4d, 3d, 2d, and 1d silver coins struck and given out from the time of George II.

These small silver pieces are of great interest to British collectors, and while they are not high priced, or rare, for the most part, they make a very worthwhile collection. Maundy sets have been available for many years. They come in fine velvet lined cases with the year of issue upon them.

During the reign of George II, Maundy pieces were coined in 1729, 1731, 1732, 1735, 1737, 1739, 1740, 1743, 1746, and 1760, in all denominations, also twopence and penny in 1756 and 1759, and the penny only in 1750, 1752, 1755, 1757 and 1758.

value, attractive packaging are the main factors leading to their popularity in England. It is surprising more interest has not been shown in these interesting sets on the part of American collectors.

There has been considerable agitation for the past several years to change our paper money considerably. It is contended that, were our bills to be identified by color, error in making change would be reduced. According to those for the system, for instance, if one dollar bills were green, two's, blue, fives, red, etc., etc., error and altering (although the latter is very difficult today) would be reduced. While such a new series would also make our currency much more attractive to look upon, so far the proposals have not met with any success. Most likely due to the extra work such varieties would cause the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

As was the case when our paper money was reduced in size, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is constantly on the lookout for ways to reduce expenses and improve our currency.

At the present time, considerable attention is being given to experimentation with a new Nylon which will not be woven, but be in the form of paper. Should this new system be perfected, we may find, in the not too far future, our "paper" money being printed on "Nylon" paper which, it is said will have a life five times longer than our present currency. Only time will tell, but it is easy to see that prolonging the life of our currency in circulation five times longer would certainly be a great saving and easing of pressure upon the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

COIN QUIZ

By CHARLES FRENCH

Coin questions answered for 25¢ per letter to help defray costs. Do not mail us coins in question.

Question:

I recently acquired some coins from my father's estate. Not knowing anything about numismatics and being a subscriber to HOBBIES I decided to write you. Will you tell me if these I list have any value?

Answer:

In looking over your list of foreign coins, I find none of any great value. They range mostly from 1¢ to 5¢ each with a couple worth 25¢ each.

The condition and variety of the gold and other U. S. pieces determine their value. There are two varieties of the 1870 $3. gold piece; one is worth $17.50 in very fine condition, but if the 1870 has an S on the reverse it would be a very rare coin.

Same with the 1911 $2.50. If it has a small D on the reverse it would be quite scarce, otherwise it would be worth $5 in fine or better condition.

The 1917 McKinley gold dollar, if unused is worth $15. As to the silver United States coins, they all demand a premium, but there again, condition determines how much.

Question:

We would like to know the top price a dealer would pay for these coins, in buying them from an individual:

(1) $1 gold pieces, one U. S. 1853, very fine; two U. S. 1852 v. f.; one California Octagonal 1853 uncirculated, except slight mar at edge. Fifty-cent gold: 1857 California octagonal Indian Head. 1899 Alaska gold, round, front has an Indian Head, reverse says Alaska gold, ½ pinch, unc. 1853 California gold, round, v. f. 1856 California gold, round, doesn't have the denomination on it but size of ½ dollar gold, unc. 1915 California gold, bear and words Eureka, v. f. 1914 Idaho gold, front Indian Head, reverse mountains and sun and words, "Esto Perpetua," unc. 1854 California gold octagonal, "N" under wreath on reverse, v. f. 1911 Alaskan gold Eskimo on front, sunset on reverse, says "½" on reverse, round, very fine. 1857 California gold, face on front, wreath on reverse, octagonal. 1900 California gold Indian Head front, bear reverse, no words, unc. 1914 Oregon gold, reverse has shield, plow and shock of wheat, Indian Head front, round, unc. 1853 California gold round, fan on front, wreath on back, v. f. 1904 Louisiana gold, round, v. g. 1857 California gold, octagonal, fan and wreath, v. f. Twenty-five cent gold pieces; 1915, 25¢ California gold, Eureka and bear on reverse, oct., good. 1911 25¢ Alaska gold, Eskimo front, sunset on reverse, round, v. f. 1850 California gold, Indian Head on front, wreath on back, no denomination, but a dollar size. 1902 Alaskan gold, Indian Head, two of these, on front wreath, and ¼ pinch on rev., octagonal, unc. 1901 California gold Indian Head, two of these, on front v. f. 1914 Montana gold, Indian Head front, reverse mountains with sun, letters Oro 1 Plata, unc. 1865 California gold, two of these, woman's face on front, wreath on reverse, octagonal 1849 California gold, round, bear on reverse, woman on front, v. fine.

—L. A. K., Illinois

Answer:

A dealer might pay you for your coins the following prices, if in very fine condition:

Gold Dollars: U. S. 1853 v. f., $5. 1852, v. f., $5. Cal., oct., 1853, if solder mark removed, $2.50, if perfect, $10.

50¢ Gold: 1857, $2; 1899 Alaska, $1.75; 1853 Cal. $2; 1856 Cal. probably charm; 1915 Cal. charm; 1914 Idaho, $4; 1854 Cal. $2; 1911 Alaska, $4; 1857 Cal. $2; 1900 Cal. charm; 1914 Ore., $4; 1853 Cal., $2.50; 1904 La., gold, $3; 1857 Cal., $2.

25¢ Gold: 1915 Cal. charm; 1911 Alaska, $3; 1856 Cal. charm; 1902 Alaska, $3.50; 1901 Cal. charm; 1914 Mont., $10; 1865 Cal. $2. ea.; 1849 Cal. $2.

The charms are jewelers' pieces and of little value usually. Genuine California gold coins can be detected by the fact that they always have their denomination upon them. Genuines should be carefully checked as there are a great many counterfeits about. Nitric acid on high spots or worn edges will show this up.

—C. F., New York

Question:

During March and April, 1954, Miss Catherine C. Maull, who was curator of the Zwaanendael Museum at that time, corresponded with you about coins found on "Coin Beach" near Indian River Inlet, south of Rehoboth Beach, Delaware; and then you published a very interesting article in the June, 1954, issue of HOBBIES Magazine about wrecks and buried treasures on our shores, entitled "Money of Yesteryear." For several years the coins have been very scarce on "Coin Beach" and very few have been found even after a severe storm.

We had almost come to the conclusion that the wreck of the Faithful Steward had given up most of its treasure. However, during the past few weeks, after high winds and storms, beachcombers have again found coins in large numbers. One theory is that the coins were probably packed in chests and are washed ashore in great numbers when the chests are broken up. Most of the coins found were the copper halfpence, dated 1740 to 1776, having the profile of George II or George III on the obverse and either "Liberty" or a harp and "Britannia" or "Hibernia" on the reverse.

One beautiful, almost perfect gold coin was found, however, and brought into the Museum for exhibit. On the obverse is the profile of George III and the inscription "Georgius III Dei Gratia." On the reverse is the coat of arms of Great Britain and "1775 M.B.F. Et H. Rex F.D.B. Et L.D.S.R.I.A.T. Et E." We are enclosing a rubbing. Can you tell us the name and value of this coin and the meaning of the letters on the reverse? Several coins were found which were similar in design to the usual copper halfpence, but the color of the metal was lighter. Could these be bronze coins?

—D. L. G., Delaware

Answer:

The gold coin is a Rose guinea and worth about $15. to $20. The meaning of the letters on the obverse is as follows: "Geo. III by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, France & Ireland, Defender of the Faith, Duke of Brunswick, Lunenburg, of the Sacred Roman Empire Arch-Treasurer and Elector.

The other coins are probably copper but due to exposure have probably turned a different color.

—C. F., New York

Question:

Enclosed please find the rubbings from a Chinese coin. Please send me any information you have on it. Both are copies of the same coin. Please tell me the approximate amount of money in actual cash I would receive from a coin dealer if I were to sell this coin.

—Mrs. S. A. N., Florida

Answer:

This piece is not a coin but some kind of a token and of no numismatic value.

—C. F., New York

Question:

Could you please give me the following information? I would like to know the value, if any, of a 50¢ piece of Confederate paper money, State of North Carolina, dated, Raleigh, January 1, 1863.

—Mrs. M. K. A., California

Answer:

The 50¢ Confederate note is worth about 25¢ in fine condition.

Question:

I recently picked up a bronze coin about the size of our quarter. On one side is the picture of Ulysses S. Grant. On the other side is this writing: "Struck and distributed in the Municipal Parade.—By the Employees of the U. S. Mint, Phila., Dec. 16, 1879." One side has the shield on it, and in the upper part of the shield is a picture of a plow. In the bottom of the shield is a picture of a ship and above is a picture of the Scales of Justice. On each side of the shield is a picture of a lady. There is some writing under the shield but I cannot make it out very well. The last word seems to be Manfield. About what is this piece worth?

—G. M., California

Answer:

The medal of Grant you found is not rare and worth around 25¢.

AMERICA'S NEW LITERARY CRADLE

By BISSELL BROOKE

How a big city awaited centuries for a native son of unusual literary accomplishment and influence is accentuated by a newly established public library room containing a colossal collection of incalculable value to American letters and literary history.

For until this century, Baltimore's outstanding literary products came from adopted sons, mainly those titans, Poe and Lanier.

They were still strangers to the tousled haired, rosy cheeked boy of nine—son of a cigar manufacturer—who, on a seething afternoon, in 1889, sat on Baltimore's snow white marble steps eagerly reading a newly found book.

This event he described later as "the most stupendous of my whole life." It began his astounding literary life, one believed without parallel in literary annals. For, that book, "Huckleberry Finn," fired the boy with an intense, insatiable interest in ideas, leading to vociferous reading and research that developed into a phenomenal career as newspaperman, editor, critic, humorist, author and philologist.

He was the 20th century's "thunderbolt," Henry Louis Mencken.

Through several decades his thumping thoughts crackled continuously from a pen sharper than any sword in his merciless assault upon American complaisance, especially the self-righteous and pretentious. "The Great Debunker" was a Daniel writing in judgment on an opulent, easy going era. His pithy, penetrating published opinions made a vital impact on contemporary life.

Likewise, Mencken was a successful scholar, particularly in philology. Probing into the science of words he exhumed important historical data resulting in "The American Language," a ponderous volume which, with later supplements, is the classical authority on English in the United States.

Fame and fortune failed to lure Mencken away from Baltimore. His continued residence there made him known as "The Sage of Baltimore." He lived simply in his family's modest house where he died at the age of 75 late in January, 1956. Only then was revealed the extent of his loyal affection for his native city.

He willed his estate of over $300,000 to go eventually to the Baltimore institutions he found most helpful in his work, the Enoch Pratt Free Library and the Johns Hopkins Hospital. Then, exclusive of these bequests came another announcement divulging deeper devotion.

During the past ten years Mencken quietly had been solidifying Baltimore's status as a literary center by gradually giving to the Pratt Library his own library, files and a vast lifetime accumulation of original literary material.

The native son, turned master craftsman, fashioned a rare, rich heritage for Baltimore: the cradle of 20th century literature!

This Collection's significance defies estimation. In discussing it, Miss Amy Winslow, Director of Pratt Library said, "it is believed unprecedented in size, content and completeness for the period it covers. And relative to Mencken himself, it surpasses the outstanding Mencken collections at Harvard and Dartmouth."

"In fact," continued Miss Winslow, "recently the Library received another very important contribution found in the Mencken home by his brother, August Mencken. It is the family genealogical papers 'The Sage' had gathered preparatory to writing his family's history. Unfortunately illness prevented this, but we are hoping to find a suitable writer to do it later."

Unlike most public presentations, this Collection not only retains but reaffirms Mencken's close, personal association. This is due to the indefatigable efforts of another Baltimore author and Mencken friend, Richard Hart. As head of the Library's department of literature and language he is in charge of "The H. L. Mencken Room."

In an isolated third floor section, the large, rectangular room is a researcher's haven with artificial lighting and air conditioning. While no personal furnishings accompanied the Collection, Mr. Hart with Miss Winslow and staff assistant Jane Wilhelm

AUTOGRAPHS

LETTERS OF AN AMERICAN ACTOR: JAMES H. HACKETT

By DORIS H. HAMILTON

Letters and memoirs of actors and actresses are invariably interesting. Professionally actors meet a great variety of people under a great variety of circumstances. They are trained observers and have a quick eye and ear to catch a foible of dress or of accent. They are a highly articulate group and often can express their thoughts and emotions on paper as readily as on the stage.

I was glancing through some letters in my theatrical collection and I enjoyed particularly the lively letters of James H. Hackett, a great comedian of the last century. His most famous roles were Falstaff, Rip Van Winkle, Nimrod Wildfire, and a Connecticut schoolmaster by the name of Melodious Migrate. Of his Falstaff N. P. Willis wrote in a letter which accompanies this collection: "The only fault I find in your Falstaff is your pronouncing 'Percie' Piercy. But probably you have authority for it."

His son James Ketelas Hackett, was the idol of theatre audiences in the early 1900's, appearing in the romances of Anthony Hope: "Prisoner of Zenda" and "Rupert of Hentzau."

is dated November 5, 1833, from Philadelphia, and Mr. Hackett's righteous indignation has been aroused because of the plagiarism of one of his "characters." He writes to Mr. Weinys, Manager of the Theater, Pittsburgh, Pa.:

"During my absence in England, Mr. Hill has had the impudence as well as injustice to perform without my permission my best Yankee character, 'Solomon Swap', well known as unpublished and of my own originating, at the Park some dozen times and elsewhere. I have, of course, a remedy at law against him and the managers who permit it, but a resort to it would be looked upon perhaps by the public (who don't understand these matters) as a kind of ill nature on my part and beneath me. Therefore, to prevent my property being thus further hacknied, after being taken down from my mouth or otherwise surreptitiously obtained, I have notified managers generally of the fact and shall consider their permitting such an infringement of the most inalienable of literary rights (the spinning of one's own brains) an act of open hostility to me and proceed accordingly. Mr. Hill has character enough of his own, without carrying on that species of Yankeeism. If I can not protect myself from having my characters made stale by such depredations I will resort to rigorous measures against both him and the managers wherever the infringement transpires. Of course I do not fear your permitting or countenancing such dishonesty, but I thought I would drop you a line as you might be ignorant of the fact of 'Solomon Swap' being in every respect my own exclusive property. I have stopped him in Boston, New York, and here, but I understand he has just been trying it in Albany and, though he will not attempt it again there, if I can catch him in New York, where I am returning tomorrow, I must clap the "Grace" upon him for example's sake.

"Wishing you all success and hoping to have a chance with you next season.

"I remain,
"Yours truly,
"Jas. H. Hackett"

"N. B. I shall esteem it a personal mark of friendship if you will inform me of any attempt at keeping up this Yankee piracy coming to your knowledge in the course of Mr. Hill's projected peregrinations in the West this winter.

"JHH"

In a letter written from 44 St. James' Place on July 7, 1845, to John Payne Collier, the Shakespeare editor, Mr. Hackett refers to the Times's criticisms of the Queen for favoring foreign performances, particularly his own. Stung by these comments, Mr. Hackett proceeds to explain the possible reasons for Queen Victoria attending the theatre where he was playing:

"Then, if the Sovereign of Great Britain, knowing that she could witness the new comedy by Jerrold at her own convenience — it having been produced several weeks previous and continuing to be performed every night — did choose, in order that the object of her visit that night might not be mistaken, to mark distinctly the first compliment ever paid by Royalty to an American artiste, is it reasonable to regard such a circumstance as a slight towards the pretensions of her own people?"

"Theatrical artistes of the American and the European continents may rest their claims for English patronage upon very different grounds. The natives of the Continent of Europe

INDIAN RELICS

Indian & Eskimo Adzes

By CHARLES MILES

An adze is an axe with the blade turned sideways. Both axes and adzes are used for chopping, but the mission of the adze is to cut out flakes or chunks or chips, rather than merely to cut a groove. It is used quite a bit like a hoe. In fact a hoe is an adze used to chop dirt, or an adze used to chop dirt is called a hoe, which ever way you prefer.

There is some confusion as to where adzes were used in aboriginal North America. They were in constant use along the Pacific and Arctic Coasts as far south as the Redwood Forests of California. They also appear to have been much used in conjunction with axes in the Mississippi Basin and on the Atlantic Seaboard.

No adzes were used in Central and Southern California or in the Southwest. And, unless elk-horn-handled hide-fleshers can be classified with adzes, none were used on the Plains.

Both blades and handles of American Indian and Eskimo adzes vary much in form. A blade flattened on one side and with a pronounced bevel edge is the general conception of the typical adze blade. But numerous surviving examples with their original handles, or helves, in the Eskimo country and among the Northwest Coast Indians, show that blades could be indistinguishable from celt, axe, chisel, gouge, and wedge blades. Edges may be curved or straight. In fact, it is likely that many chisels, celts, and gouges, classified as such by Eastern collectors, were used as adze blades.

Adze blades were commonly used to cut, to the best ability of a stone, shell, horn, or ivory edge. However, it should be remembered that the Indians used fire to eat away wood, so the adze blade had to mainly clean out the charcoal.

Also much adze work was on soft wood, such as cedar, and on dirt or flesh. Nevertheless, adze blades could be sufficiently sharp to cut away wood cleanly, as is shown by the clean-cut adze marks on boards, boxes, totem-poles, canoes, and other adzed objects made by the Northwest Coast Indians.

Shell adze blades are seldom seen among North American artifacts. However, their use in the stone adze blades of Northwestern California indicates possibility of their use elsewhere. Certainly specimens of intricate carving in very hard wood, cut by shell blades in New Zealand and the South Sea Islands, show that shell could be sharpened and kept to a keen edge.

After contact with Europeans, steel and iron blades were available. Small steel axe blades lashed to adze handles are not unusual in the Pacific Northwest. The lashing runs through the axe helve hole. Old trap-triggers were also favorite material for adze blades.

The kinds of handle that prevailed in the Eastern States are not known. They decayed or were destroyed long ago. But there was a variety of handles among the Pacific Coast Indians and Eskimos.

As even small pieces of wood were scarce on the Behring Coast, the Eskimos of that region commonly used horn bone, and ivory for handles. Sometimes the blade was lashed directly to the end of the handle; sometimes it was socketed in horn or bone, lashed to the handle.

The angle of handle and blade varied from a right to an acute angle. The handles were straight or curved. A handle with the curve held upward was advantageous. It supplied a little springiness that guarded against splitting the handle.

It might be asked how it was that adzes were of use in a region with so little wood. The answer is they were used to cut other things, notably frozen meat and earth. One special kind of adze is common in the Arctic. It is called a root adze and used to dig out roots needed by the Eskimos to supplement their flesh diet.

Root adzes often seem to us rather inefficient as they have long blades, but it is likely they also performed the functions of digging-sticks, that is, the blades were used to pry out roots as well as to chop earth. In this connection certain "chisels" found in the Eastern States have a polish that indicates they were used in the same fashion as the Eskimo root adzes.

Some of the root adzes have developed into such large form they can only be classified as mattocks. The blades are long, heavy sections of walrus-tusk ivory and the handles are heavy, two-handed, wooden affairs.

The favorite adze of the Northwest Coast Indians has a handle much like that of a hand-saw, the blade being fastened to the flat front of the handle. Such handles are made of whalebone as a rule. Sometimes, like most everything else in that area, they have decorative carving.

In the Puget Sound and Olympic Peninsula area of the Pacific Northwest two other distinct types of adzes were popular. One was a rather long, curved handle affair with the blade-holder portion forming a T. The other was a U-shape handle with the blade on the outer edge of one side of the U. The latter type (the U handle used with the points down) made a well-adapted tool for cutting out the inside of dugout canoes.

Canoes remind us that the adze seems to have accompanied the use of dugout canoes. These were used in aboriginal times in the Eastern States more than our familiarity with the picturesque birch-bark canoe lets us realize.

Still another type of handle and adze used on the Pacific Coast was standard in Northwestern California and for some distance up the Oregon Coast. This type treats the adze as a chisel, but customarily one with a J-shaped curve, the J being upside down.

The blades on these were set in against a ridge or shelf. Anthropologists tell us that their customary form was a long, tough clam-shell though elk-horn and stone blades set in such handles are known. They were used with the curl back over the hand. A leather apron guarded the knuckles in front.

Although the digging adzes of the Arctic have received the name of root adzes, there seems some reluctance to call the elk-horn handled fleshers of the Plains, adzes. Their use, however, warrants such a classification.

A specimen, with its original flint blade, indicates that, at least in this one instance, the bevel on the blade was inside, rather than outside as was customary. Perhaps this gave more efficiency in chopping the dried chunks of flesh from the hides.

As adzes exactly similar to those of North America are in use in the Orient for the same purposes it is probable, they were carried across the Behring Strait with the early immigrants to the Americas. At any rate, although they did not occur in some areas, as noted, they can be said to be one of the commoner aboriginal tools of North America.

Mythology of the Navaho

There are two hereafters and four underworlds in the mythology of the Navaho Indians.

The creation story of this tribe, together with much other Navaho mythology, as revealed by one of its chiefs, Old Man Buffalo Grass, to Aileen O'Bryan of Santa Fe, N. Mex., has just been published by the Bureau of American Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution. He related the myths as they were told to him by his grandmother, and by medicine men.

First was the black world, an island floating in mist. In the sky above it were four clouds, black, white, blue and yellow. The black cloud represented the female being, or substance, within whose darkness were contained the forms of life. The inhabitants of this black world were the mist people who had no definite form or bodies.

The white cloud was the male principle of creation. When white and black cloud met, the first man was formed. Once the races of plants and animals had been created by the meeting of the clouds, these clouds themselves became transformed into worlds.

The newly created climbed into the second world, that of the blue cloud. They found it already inhabited by the birds, especially the blue birds, blue hawks, blue jays, and blue herons. The birds resented the intrusion and the humans "found an opening in the world of blue haze." They climbed through this into the third or yellow world.

Here occurred the great flood, a legend which the Navaho apparently share with most primitive peoples, probably including all Indian tribes.

"After this the people saw white light in the East and in the South and West and North. One of the deer people ran to the East, and returning, said that the white light was a great sheet of water. The sparrow hawk flew to the South, the great hawk to the West and the kingfisher to the North. They returned and said that a flood was coming. The kingfisher said that the water was greater in the North and that it was near.

"When first man learned of the coming of the water he sent word to all the people and told them to come to the mountain called Sisinjin. He told them to bring with them all the seeds of plants used for food. All living beings were to gather on top of the mountain.

"The water rose steadily. First man discovered he had forgotten his medicine bag. Now this bag contained not only the earth from the six sacred mountains, but the medicine he used to call the rain down upon the earth and to make things grow. He could not live without his medicine bag, and he wished to jump into the rising water. So he asked kingfisher to dive into the water and recover the bag."

But the flood itself did not subside and the people, together with most of the animals, climbed through a hollow reed into the fourth world—that of the white cloud, or male principle. This fourth world, however, was a small, barren land. Again the reed was planted and through it life climbed into the fifth world—that which man now occupies.

But beyond this, the Navaho medicine men teach, there are two other worlds. First is that of the spirits of living things. Still higher is the "place of melting into one."

The Making of a Modern Cartridge

By HARRY WANDRUS

The most essential component and the one which permits the attainment of high pressures, high velocities and accuracy in our modern firearms is the cartridge case. Thanks to 20th century industrial technology, it has been manufactured throughout the world in untold billions, and for the most part these have functioned with surprising uniformity. The making of a typical case, the .30-06, indicates some of the many steps needed in case manufacture, and it must be remembered that the steps enumerated do not include the frequently tested samples withdrawn from the assembly line and run through the laboratory routine. The following steps are the most important though not all inclusive steps in case manufacture:

1. CUPPING—where the flat blank or button of brass is run through the first die to give it a slightly cupped shape, preparatory to actual drawing.

2. FIRST DRAW—the second step in which the "cup" is somewhat lengthened in the first drawing die.

3. FURNACE ANNEALING—every drawing or working of brass causes it to harden and to make it more brittle. Between various operations it is accordingly necessary to heat the brass to soften it for the next operation.

4. SECOND DRAW—a further elongation of the future case.

5. FURNACE ANNEALING

6. BUMPING—in which the drawing is now squared off at its closed end.

7. THIRD DRAW—further elongation.

8. FURNACE ANNEALING

9. FOURTH DRAW—further elongation to a length already greater than finished case length. This draw determines the wall thickness.

10. CUT-OFF—the case is cut to its approximate final length.

11. HEADSTAMP—the date of manufacture, place of manufacture, etc., are stamped into the head of the case.

12. HEAD TURNING—this step involves the machine turning into the case of the future extractor groove.

13. BODY ANNEALING—one of the many final anneals given the final finished case. The various sections of a cartridge case bear different temperatures or degrees of hardness; for example, the mouth may be soft whereas the head is rather hard and the body between these in hardness.

14. WASHING—this removes the oxides, general dirt, graphite, grease or what have you which have accumulated in the manufacturing process.

15. LUBRICATION—the case is lubricated in preparation for the final shaping.

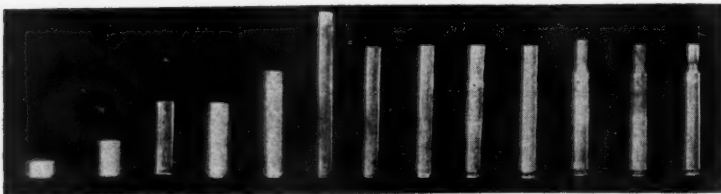

16. TAPERING—run through dies, the case takes on its final shape, a slightly tapered, necked case.

17. TRIMMING & BURRING—the case is cut to proper length and burrs incidental to die-forming and trimming are removed.

18. RELIEF ANNEALING—the case is further annealed to relieve all stresses incidental to final shaping.

19. WASHING—case is given final washing.

20. MOUTH ANNEALING—mouth is annealed to permit bullet insertion in loading procedure.

450 pieces, many with historical associations are on view, these ranging in the period 1400 to 1800. Galleries of special note are those showing equestrian equipment for battle, for parade and for tournament, to Medieval and Renaissance arms and armour, to sporting weapons, etc. Enthusiasts welcome the exhibits which have been in the remodeling stage for several years and not open to the public as a result.

Of interest to collectors of Western weapons and those weapons used in the Indian Wars is the book, "The Northwest Gun" by Charles E. Hanson, Jr., published by the Nebraska Historical Society, Lincoln, Nebr. Its 85 pages deals with the English firearms sold through the Hudson Bay Company's stores to the Indians. It deals, too, with some of the American arms sold to them and distributed by the Indian Bureau. Covering the period 1775 to 1875, it dispels many of the foolish and incorrect notions people have developed about "shoddy" weapons sold to the redmen. The book is available free with a ten dollar contribution to the society.

Civil War fans should take note of two Lincoln books, one "Lincoln And The Tools of War," by Bruce, and "Lincoln's Choice" by Buckridge, both of which deal much with the Ordnance of that Great Rebellion and the part and interest the President took in it. Both of these sell for $5.00.

Those who have seen and own the first volume of the "Machine Gun," by Lt. Col George M. Chinn will be pleased to learn that Volume IV, dealing with automatic weapons mechanisms in great detail is now available from the Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. Unfortunately the second and third volumes treated with material which for the time being is considered secret and thus not available to the general public. Loaded with illustrations and covering the subject in 638 pages the work is priced at $6.50.

Lt. Colonel B. R. Lewis has just authored a truly valuable work entitled "Small Arms And Ammunition In The United States Service" which covers all such material up to 1865 and in some instances up to 1878. Those who have seen Col. Lewis's writings in military and small arms publications know what a stickler he is for facts, and know too that he insists on documentation wherever and whenever possible. The work includes information on such things as performance, range, accuracy, check list of cartridges used, Confederate items, foreign items used in our armies, digests of U.S., British and French cartridge patents, extracts from Ordnance Regulations and 52 plates. It has 338 pages and priced at $8.00. It is available from Ray Riling's Book Service.

Weapons may come and go, but the foot soldier is always with us and always our concern. In our efforts to make his lot as happy a one as is possible with our technology we find ourselves piling him up with more and more equipment—and then periodically find it necessary to re-evaluate his equipment to reduce it to the most important factor—the man himself.

GEMS & MINERALS

A Case of Curiosity

By H. DOUGLAS BROWN

In the community of Shell Beach on California's ocean coast, midway between San Francisco and Los Angeles, is the Pacific Museum. Among the upwards of forty cases of minerals and gems is one called the "Case of Curiosities." The first specimen in it is a 3" cross-section of a salmon trout with a rich, red interior, and a surface very much like a trout's skin. The whole, of course, is an agate, with the center entirely of fine carnelian.

Another specimen is a quartz crystal enclosing two perfect pyrites cubes. Then there is a fayalite nodule from Salmon Creek, Washington, which closely resembles a seated monkey. Last we omit the locality of the first two specimens, the trout section came from this same Salmon Creek and the quartz crystal enclosing the cubes of pyrites from Calaveras County, California.

A fine specimen of petrified bark came from Zillah, near Yakima, Washington. And a large shark's tooth was found at an elevation of approximately 1200 feet above sea level, at Legion Spring, a point on the road between Toppenish and Goldendale, Washington.

We have an arrowhead from Arroyo Grande, California, which shows the vertebrae of a fish, indicating that this flint was formed from the ancient bed of a stream or the ocean. Next in this case is the tooth of a sea-cow with 3/16 of the outer portion a very definite blue color and the center the usual white of ivory. It comes from Coalinga, California. There is also a perfect agatized shrimp in all its detail from Newport Beach, Oregon.

Small dams found in Death Valley have a shell which has been turned from limestone to red carnelian. A polished slab of this shows a myriad of taratella shells from Wyoming. Above it is the cork-screw cast of the interior of a taratella shell entirely in agate.

A pine cone, completely petrified, even to the minute pine nuts, is a unique display and comes from Patagonia. Then there are quartz crystals enclosing chlorite moss from Plumas County, California, and a petrified seabeam, also a poppy seed pod, from the John Day Valley of Oregon.

A display of melted coins from the fire resulting from the 1906 San Francisco earthquake are in this case near a cathedral in miniature of white chalcedony from the Blewett District of Washington. Close by is a quartz crystal, which has three sides and one rear corner ground with parallel ridges. When viewed from the front it shows a beautiful image of a Chinese pagoda.

The next mineral curiosity is a beautiful piece of iridescent chalcophryite from the Chihuahua River of Washington, and neighboring it, a fine specimen of jasperized conifer wood with the annual growth rings in rich, red jasper. Here is geode section in which the crystals, instead of being the usual quartz, are the cubes of pyrites. And a serpentine boulder has visible stringers of gold.

An Eskimo lamp, simply a hollowed out rock in which a piece of blubber was set and ignited, stands next a strange lava formation in the shape and size of a doughnut with coconut frosting which came from Friday Ranch in Central Oregon.

Then there is a specimen of green glass in which are spheres of white resulting from the burning of a glass plant in the Rocky Mountains.

Some pieces of solarized glass of deepest amethyst are beside the petrified stump of a small tree taken from the excavation for the courthouse in the city of Seattle. Another curiosity is a spherical piece of rock, approximately one and one half inches in diameter, with a small half inch hole running through it. The rock is limestone and the hole is caused by a deposit formed inside a pipe at a mine near Darrington, Washington. This mine has to replace its pipes every year or so as they become completely clogged with lime deposits. A hill nearby is coated to several feet in thickness by travertine deposited from the waters of the adjacent spring.

Finally in this case of curiosities, is a perfectly rounded gastrolith or dinosaur gizzard stone from Wyoming. The stone itself is petrified wood. Consider the history of this specimen. It was a tree grown to maturity. It fell, was covered, eventually petrified, was eroded, broke into small fragments, and was adopted by Mr. Dinosaur. He ran his term, was covered by pumice, and eons later was exhumed by University of Chicago paleontologists. Eventually his gizzard as petrified wood arrived at the Pacific Museum.

From the fascinating story of this one mineral case readers may gauge how very worthwhile would be a visit to the Pacific Museum and its many cases of gems and minerals.

The Picture POST CARD

An Open Letter to Post Card Collectors

By LOUISE COLLINS

Hello Collectors:

This is the month in which to count our blessings, and to be thankful for them all. And blessings certainly include our cards, our card-collecting activities, and the many friends we have made while collecting them.

That is, if we have had the proper spirit as we collected, we have many friends for whom to be thankful. It sometimes pays to take an inventory of ourselves along with our possibilities and our possessions to see if we have always been as fair and as friendly as we have been smart. Thankful time is as good a time to review our situation as is New Years.

It has been quite some time now since we have sat down and talked in a general way about collecting and exchanging. We have felt an awful urge to write at length to all of you, but our time will not let us do it individually. Therefore we say to all of you "Hi! How's Collecting agreeing with you, these days?"

Collecting activity, like everything else comes and goes with a sort of rhythm, in waves. There are periods of great activity, then there is a sort of leveling off for awhile. There are changes in styles and methods, too. During the war, in the mid-forties, there was a heavy wave of exchanging, and the number of small collectors mushroomed. Now the activity has changed more to local clubs, programs, annual exhibits, quests for cards on our travels. The tendency is to fewer, larger collections, with the smaller collectors staying in the background, and there is a great slump in exchanging.

We think Club activity is wonderful, and the exhibits and bourses are inspiring, but they reach a few exclusive collectors in the large centers. The clubs grow larger and more active, and the members join the other clubs too and visit the annual exhibits across the country. This is wonderful, and attending clubs and visiting exhibits is a world of fun. But if indulged in to excess it can prove quite expensive in money and time. There is a danger of the collector having to let his collection be at a standstill, and having no time for exchange. This frightens young new collectors, who think they have to follow suit and the pace is too fast, the requirements of exhibiting can become too rigid. And no one has any time to exchange with and advise him regularly.

We are nostalgic for the days of heavy exchanging, for people's taking time to exchange carefully and to encourage the beginners. The good collectors with the know-how seem to be entirely engrossed in their local clubs and activities, and the National and International aspects are lost sight of. Lately, for instance, we have had several good collectors promise us write-ups for their collections, but then they became busy attending rallies, making up exhibits, judging exhibits, until they have had to postpone the write-ups for a year or more. Going to exhibits, and making speeches, and being presented blue ribbons at banquets, are wonderful. But what has become of the quiet collectors who have interesting collections too, and make them through world-wide exchange, and are at home sometimes to show them to the children and young folks, and have time to lead a new collector on the path to careful collecting. The growth of the hobby is somewhat dependent upon exchangers who have time to help young collectors, isolated collectors and collectors from small towns who are dependent upon exchanging through the mails.

Perhaps it was the war and the fact that travel was curbed that encouraged heavy exchanging. Perhaps it is high postage plus freedom of travel that encourage local clubs and many exhibits. We are all for activity, but still writing and exchanging are the very life blood of post card collecting. They are the grass roots of the hobby. We need badly to be raising a new crop of post card collectors. The old timers with their large collections alone will not keep a hobby growing.

When this writer began to collect cards, several wonderful old-timers took her right in hand. They sent her cards that she never dreamed existed. They acted as though it were a privilege to show a newcomer the ropes. They wrote in a friendly manner, exchanged card for card and were thoughtful of her needs. They did not bawl her out when she innocently sent cards they did not need. That was only fourteen years ago. Time and people have not changed that much—only unless we watch ourselves, we get involved in inflation and become calloused and selfish. A fresh start, or a new clean leaf would be good for all of us.

One thing many of us become careless about is keeping adequate records — records of our exchanger's wants, so that we might at least partially please him; records of what we sent him, so that we do not duplicate too many times. And some of us are sending the same card back and forth—ha! no one card is worth that much postage!

The number of exhibits we see encourage us and increase our enthusiasm, but if we do not watch they will help deepen one rut we are getting into. We see the Detroit of another collector and we want Detroit, too. Out of the hundreds of good publishers of cards, we have picked less than a dozen as desirable. Out of hundreds of artists, we have picked two or three. Out of the many subjects, we have picked half a dozen. Are these better than the others? No, someone started that way, and we all play Follow the Leader. Libraries go begging while we all try for post offices. Historic houses are thrown aside because we are in the race for court houses. We all want the exact set we saw on an exhibit. We are making a deep rut.

There is a great need for some of us to get out of the rut and to use our imagination and ingenuity in our collecting. Where is the collector, for Success or failure in business is caused more by mental attitude even than by mental capacities.

FOOTBALL STADIUM POST CARDS

instance, who dares to say "I prefer Mela Koehler to Clapsaddle" and follow it up by swapping a few. We are afraid our Clapsaddles will be worth too much, we hug them to us. Who said so? Mela Koehler is twenty times as rare or perhaps I should qualify by saying that I have found only one twentieth as many.

No one ever tells us "I want costumes from every country." No one has ever admitted wanting all the famous restaurants of the world. No one asks for all the museums. They all want L.L.s or they will give more than they are worth for any Oilette. Let's some of us explore a little. There are other possibilities than those few so highly acclaimed. You may say that if we had a large stock of old Detroiters we would try to push them more. We believe not, we have tried to encourage individuality and interest often at the expense of our own interests. It just is so that there are many channels through which you can acquire and enjoy a large post card collection and you do not have to duplicate anyone else's treasures. We should set our own patterns for collecting, and suit ourselves—to heck with what others think we should have.

We can use our own ideas about mounting or storing our cards. Instead of our helplessly crying for post card albums, we can use kodak albums and large corners, jumbo size. After all when people used the slitted albums the jumbo corners had not come into popular use. Slitted albums may some day come back, but in spite of our begging through these columns for someone to advertise them, no one has taken us up on it. Also if you cannot afford a metal file, don't just sit and wait. Start your collection in a series of shoe boxes.

We should not be rubber stamps of each other. Let's have more exploration, more imagination, more collectors daring to be original. If you can't be a big time general collector, you don't have to be the same kind of specialist as your neighbor unless what he likes also appeals to you. Perhaps you don't want Santa Clauses but you do like dolls on cards. Or you may want one big album of St. Patrick cards. Be brave enough to be yourself.

East Banger, CHARLES BRAY, Penna. tfo

And for goodness sakes let's look into our cards occasionally and be sure that they are there in good condition and protected from the elements, from rodents and from insects. We have even had cards offered us for sale when they had been completely ruined in all those ways. Well, be it known that no card is that valuable that we can overlook condition.

There is a definite need for more publicity on exchange groups and individuals who wish to exchange. There should be a card in these columns for all the local clubs, all the better exchange clubs, and any number of individual collectors who wish exchanges. This would greatly add to the value of these pages in information, and to the advantage of the advertisers themselves. A knowledge of what clubs are available, what cards are wanted, who will exchange would then be more up to date and more authentic.

This brings to our mind an item of ethics we would like to mention. We get letters describing a wonderful collection of cards for sale. The writer says "Please send us the names of persons interested in buying." If we were able to spare the time to run an agency like that we would still be exploited, but it's even worse than that. We write for a magazine that carries ads. And the ads reach the interesting and interested collectors. Yet we are asked to use our time for free to give unfair competition to our own department of that magazine.

And there are others who send us long lists of cards they want to exchange or ask for lists of persons who might exchange, and they got our name from HOBBIES all right—at the library; or they tell us in detail that they have to wait until Mrs. Jones gets through with her HOBBIES to read our articles, and will we please send them the November number, right away!

HOBBIES is for sale, and the ads reach more people than we can ever write, and do it more efficiently than we can. You wouldn't write one or Chicago's big mail order houses and ask them who will buy your old stove or to send you the names of all the other mail order houses so that you can get catalogues, or to lend you their mailing list for a week. You don't tell all your personal affairs to these businesses. It is true that HOBBIES is different and the department heads are human beings, but let's be fair to them.

This reminds us of other ethical slips we and others have committed. Many people cannot make up their minds. There is much evidence of people joining exchange groups and then getting too busy or too lazy or losing interest and not telling folks. They just take letters and never answer.

There is evidence of people answering a gift of cards with a long winced personal exposure and no cards. A pen pal wants to rave at length on paper. A pen pal should not join a card club. There is a vast difference in the two. Card clubs should not cater to pen pals. Grab bags, card showers, and Lucky card corners are applicable, but what significance to card collectors are birthday twins, gifts, and secret pals, long letters with many snaps and pressed flowers?

There is still some evidence among collectors of old fashioned "Horse-trading" tactics—of collectors trying to be slick enough to build a collection at no expense to themselves. Some even try to make money in the process. I am speaking of the guys who give you bad cards for good and one card for five. You have all met them.

There is still some evidence of some older, more experienced collectors being unhelpful and discouraging well meaning new collectors who do not yet know the value of cards. Some exploit the newcomers to get certain cards; others just do not have the time to help train new ones, and discourage them by making fun of the only cards they have yet obtained. These newer collectors need help and training. They may later prove valuable to the post card hobby.

And now, what about our cards? Do all of us use them? Have you exhibited any at your county fair? Have you made a display for the advertising of some local drive like the Red Cross or Girl Scouts? Have you put a display in some Thanksgiving window at a local store? Do you let any school children use them or teachers borrow them for some appropriate unit? Do you have a frame of them in your office? Or do you show them on a projector and give a lecture?

Have you arranged a home for your cards after you are gone? Are you giving them to some library or museum? Or are your family going to burn them up when they become disillusioned because they do not bring a fortune on the market? These are some things for you to mull over.

Today there are some very interesting new cards on the market—both American and foreign cards that should give an impetus to your collecting. If you dare, and can't find the old cards you want, try making a collection of Kodachromes, and Spanish embroidered and Swiss flowers and birds, and modern views of old landmarks.

Are you still with us? Are you thankful for your collection and your collector friends? Then let's do an even better job by them and by your hobby.

Happy collecting!

NEWS and PREVIEWS

1. On August 23, the Keystone Club of Philadelphia wrote us a nice item to be published in the October issue of HOBBIES. We have been anxious to hear from Keystone. For several months after it was organized, we answered peoples' inquiries by saying that as far as we knew there was not a club in Philadelphia. We have since corrected that statement, although not on official information. We truly regret that our October material was sent in on August 1, and we were writing this November number when the letter arrived. Items for this department must arrive two full months ahead. (For ads you should write HOBBIES direct).

This is what happened at Keystone. They had their First Annual Exhibit at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel on October 13 and 14. The exhibit concentrated on post cards only which was good. We congratulate Keystone on the good work they are doing, and we hope to hear more from them in the future.

For information about this club, you should write to: Elizabeth A. Riley, 620 E. Allegheny Ave., Philadelphia 34, Pennsylvania.

2. We suggest, as per our article, that you who are starting clubs, or who have clubs—both local and national—run a card in this department regularly, year round. They are "cheaper by the dozen!"

3. We have collectors who say, "No comics, please." Why not change it to say, "No dirty comics, please." Dwig, Tom Browne, Lederer, Oultcalt, and Lance Thackeray are very collectable comics.

4. Motels and Hotels today put out beautiful cards. The motels are a part of our present day culture, and the cards are often lovely. It isn't impossible to build quite an interesting collection of Motel, hotel, and restaurant cards. Don't be ashamed to ask your friends to save them for you.

5. Time for that Thanksgiving football game! Do you collect College Stadiums? They make an interesting frame. And your local high school might like them as a loan exhibit.

6. When you read this, it is time for you to rush news to us for the February issue.

7. If you can snatch time from your club work, write us about your collection again. It has been a long time now, and all of you should mention what is new in your collection and how much you have advanced. Be sure all of you, to tell us how many cards you have, how long you have had them, where and how you store and display them. What are your favorites, and what are your oldest?

can expect no favor, based upon the principles of reciprocity; because it is a notorious fact that their capital cities have discouraged practically every attempt hitherto to establish among them an English drama or to support even temporarily any corps of English artistes; whereas the United States, quite regardless of their political separation, have continued to foster signally and reward liberally all English actors of merit, drawing no distinction between them and their own citizens except the courtesy due to strangers and sojourners, coupled with a general attention proportioned to their talent and novelty. Therefore may not the fact of my being a native of the United States, apart from my professional popularity, have influenced the Queen's selection of me, as a medium through which to express for the first time to the people of Republican America Her sense of the remarkable liberality its citizens have displayed towards so many of Her subjects who, as actors have reaped golden harvests there since our Revolution.

In other letters in the group Mr. Hackett describes his detective work in tracing his relatives in England and on the continent. He discusses his family portraits and he writes some important autobiographical notes. However it is in a letter of October 18, 1839, from London to "My dear old Mother" that, after discussing various family matters, he concludes with news of the most popular serial of the day:

"If I have time before the mail leaves, I will send Jane some papers. At all events the finish of Nickleby shall come by the next steamer."

Let us hope Mr. Dickens made his deadline and that Mr. Hackett's mother found the last part of Nicholas Nickleby to her liking!

FROM THE MAIL BAG

A HOBBIES reader wrote to me about meeting the Apache Chief Geronimo at the Pan American Exposition in Buffalo, 1901. Her description of Geronimo was so interesting that with her permission, I am passing them along to other readers.

"Geronimo was tall and powerful, towering over his uniformed guard. His face was strong and determined, with deep lines as he was not young. There he stood in his magnificent headdress of eagle feathers and his beaded buckskin jacket. . . an awe-some figure to me.

"When my father made him a present of some money, Geronimo took it and with a look of infinite craftiness started putting it in his buckskin trouser pocket. Out shot the hand of the guard, snatching the money from Geronimo and putting it in his own pocket. A look of hate flashed from the eyes of Geronimo. I was much saddened and we left the compound soon afterward.

"I asked my father if he did not think it too bad to take money like that and he said it did seem so. He supposed they were afraid he would escape.

"Geronimo either could speak very little English or he was not allowed to do so. The guard did the talking and told my father about Geronimo's exploits while I watched Geronimo slowly forming the letters of his name on my father's card. He did make a remark or two in guttural tones I could not understand.

"Of all the sights of the Exposition, the wonderful buildings and exhibits, I remember most vividly the grandeur of Geronimo's tall figure and that he smiled at me, evidently not resenting children." D. H.

NATURAL HISTORY

Planets Collide and Leave Tektites

There probably once was a glass-skinned planet the size of the earth. It moved around the sun in an orbit between those of Mars and Jupiter. Now the earth's surface is strewn with millions of fragments of this planet's glass surface.

The sun's tenth major satellite was smashed to bits in a collision with another planet . . . perhaps its twin moving in the same vast emptiness of space . . . or one of the moons of Jupiter.

This is the interpretation offered by Ralph Stair of the National Bureau of Standards of the so-called tektites or black-green "diamonds," found in various parts of the world. They are bits of the glass which once formed a part of the shell of the lost world. Mr. Stair's account has been recently published in the Annual Report of the Smithsonian Institution.

Tektites have been known since the time of man. Primitive races used to make arrow points from them or used them for decorations. The great smash, however, could not have been very long ago in cosmic history, for none of the fragments are found in ancient geological strata.

It is not unlikely that the earth itself was once at least partially "glass-shelled." Through various processes the shell was changed into the present sedimentary rocks. That the glass fragments weighing from fractions of an ounce to several pounds, are of extraterrestrial origin, Stair concludes, now can be accepted as a virtual certainty. Their chemical composition is quite different from that of any earthly rocks; they required for fusion more heat than has been available on our earth in recent geological time; they are quite different from any manufactured glass; and their shapes are such as to indicate very rapid passage through the earth's atmosphere. It is concluded that their structure is about what could be expected in the evolution of a planetary body of about the earth's size.

Mr. Stair says that all the sun's planets presumably were formed originally from conglomerations of cosmic dust. As they grew in size heat would be generated from their own contraction under gravity, from radioactive material contained in the dust particles and from various chemical reactions as different elements were brought into close contact. This heat would be sufficient eventually to turn the whole into a liquid mass. Then the heavier elements would sink toward the center, forming the core, and the lighter ones would rise to the top, constituting the surface. This appears to be about what happened in the case of the earth itself. The lighter elements are those which would, under proper temperature and other conditions such as can be assumed to have existed, fuse into glass of about the composition of the tektites.

The stone and nickel-iron meteorites that constantly bombard the earth presumably originated in the same way at different levels. But a large chunk of any of these materials hitting the earth with a terrific impact, would behave somewhat differently from glass. A large chunk of the latter would shatter into small fragments, which would be scattered over a considerable area. Such impacts probably occurred in Australia, Borneo, Texas, the Libyan Desert, the Philippines, Czechoslovakia, and elsewhere, to judge from the present tektite distribution. In each case the chemical composition is somewhat different, indicating that the glass came from different parts of the lost world.

How did it meet destruction? It is unlikely that there were "intelligent" beings who made a slight miscalculation with a nuclear bomb of some sort. In fact, it is pointed out that none of the tektites or any other fragments of meteorites have revealed any evidence of life.

The most probable explanation is that the glass-skinned planet was constantly deviated out of its orbit by the gravitational attraction of Jupiter. This could have eventually brought it into the path of its twin—perhaps another glass-skinned planet which also was destroyed—or with one of Jupiter's satellites, probably more numerous a few million years ago than at present. Some of the fragments were blown quite out of the solar system. Others, caught by the gravitational attraction of the sun, became minor planets. Others continue to bombard the earth.

Torrey Jackson, 19-year-old nature and wild life photographer of Marblehead, Mass., is the winner of the 1956 Graflex Press Fellowship in photo-journalism. The fellowship is sponsored by Graflex, Inc., Rochester, N. Y., maker of the Speed Graphic camera.

NATURE PHOTOGRAPHER WINS GRAFLEX PRESS FELLOWSHIP

Torrey Jackson, 19-year-old nature and wild life photographer has been awarded the 1956 Graflex Press Fellowship in photo-journalism. He lives at 62 Longview Drive, Marblehead, Mass.

Established to aid aspiring photographers in their careers with on-the-job experience in press photo coverage, the fellowship is sponsored annually by Graflex, Inc., Rochester, New York.

Jackson will spend the week of Sept. 10 in New York City working with cameramen, darkroom specialists and editors in every phase of photo-journalism on the New York Daily News. He covered the week's top news breaks in the New York City area under the guidance of the News' leading photographers.

In addition, he will process film, make prints, and sit in on editorial conferences during his week's study of how a top city newspaper operates.

Jackson has been taking pictures since he was eight years old. At 15 he started public lecturing on wild bird pictures and is today considered an authority in the field of nature photography. He is listed in the Photographic Society Who's Who, has exhibited his work in salons, and has won many prizes for his photos.

Master of Teenie Weenies Creates Pioneer Ohio Home in Miniature

By MARY DICKERSON DONAHEY

It is a fine thing for a man to have any sort of hobby. But when he develops one that gives pleasure and profit not only to himself but to a lot of other people too, it is exceptionally good. And such a hobby William Donahey of Chicago developed recently.

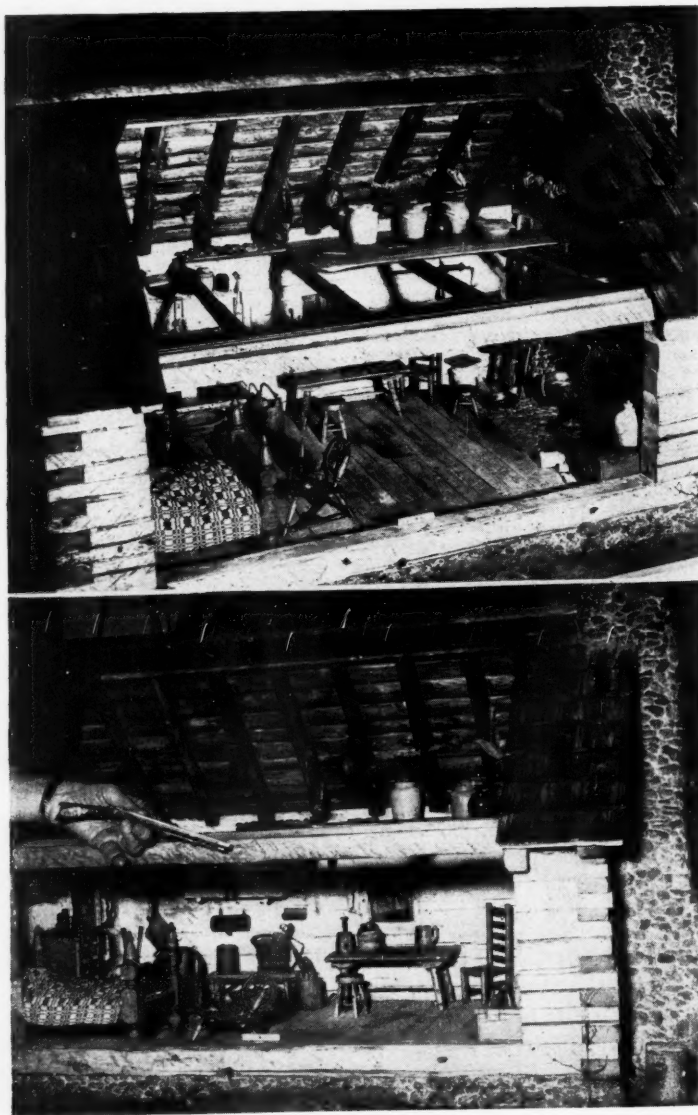

As long as he can remember, he has been interested in things of the past—history was the only study he liked when he went to school, and he was always making friends with the old people down in Tuscarawas

County, Ohio, where he was born, and where he had many relatives, to whose farms he loved to go from his home in New Philadelphia, Ohio, during vacations. There was one very old couple who were, so his father told him, living exactly as their parents had lived back about 1800, and he visited them often and studied the things they used and the way they used them. So when he decided to show people of today—and tomorrow, too—how people lived in the past, he had a wonderful background.

At first his idea was to write and illustrate a book about it. He could well have done this as he has written and illustrated nine books, and every week for forty-two years has written and illustrated his Sunday feature for little children, the Teenie Weenies, which appears in all newspapers subscribing to the Chicago Tribune-New York Daily News Syndicate. The Teenie Weenies have appeared all over this country in Mexico, Cuba, Canada, Germany, Sweden, and the Teenie Weenie books have been translated into four foreign languages. But besides being a good author and artist, Mr. Donahey prides himself on being a good carpenter, too, and he decided that it was better to build a cabin, just as it might have been built by his own great grandfather, in 1799, and to furnish it exactly as it would have been furnished then. He felt that the sight of the actual objects would be more impressive than any pictures of them, drawn or written.

So he set to work in his basement work shop in his Chicago home, and the job lasted three winters. His summers, Mr. Donahey spends in his own more modern log cabin in the deep woods near Grand Marais, Mich. It was not an easy job he had set himself. Mrs. Donahey insists that often the language that floated up the basement stairs to the library turned the bindings of all the books deep blue! It was because every thing was so very small. Often he had to make the tools that would handle the tiny objects he was turning out—often a thing would be almost completed, and—it would break and have to be done all over! The completed cabin is forty-six inches long, twenty-eight inches wide, and twenty inches high. It is made of squared, peeled logs, that being the less rustic and picturesque, but more practical way of the men who made permanent homes in the wilderness. Only a few years ago, Mr. Donahey visited the log house his great-grandfather had built, down in the Ohio hills, and it was still being lived in. It had been well built, of big black walnut logs.

The floor of the little cabin is of puncheons—that is logs left round on one side, smoothed flat on top with a broad ax. There is one door, built of wide planks with a wooden latch and wooden hinges and a heavy bar that can be dropped across it for safety. At the side is one window, with oiled paper instead of glass. Glass was very expensive and almost unattainable—like iron of any sort. All such things had to be packed through the wilderness over the mountains in ox teams or on horse back, so glass and iron were not used much. Big cabins, like this small one, were put together with wooden pegs, as was all the furniture. Wooden pegs have been used here, too.

Opposite the door is a big fireplace. It looks like stone, but like the foundation is made of soaked up newspapers—solid as can be. There is a crane for cooking, and on the crane hangs a tiny pot, and other pots and pans stand by the hearth—all of which Mr. Donahey made, as he did the crockery jars—all of which would be perfectly usable for a housewife of the proper size—between six and seven inches tall.

By the door there is a tall chest of drawers and beyond it a four poster bed, modeled on one Mr. Donahey inherited and made from old maple wood. He says "these two things may have been packed over the mountains from the original home, but they couldn't bring much furniture. Remember—they had to pack in the wagons food for themselves and their horses—or oxen—cows, pigs, and chickens enough to last until they cleared the forest, planted and raised their first crop. That took time! They had to bring seed, of course, and blankets and the few iron pots they used for cooking. They only brought things that were absolutely essential to daily life."

The heavy table under the window, the stools and straight backed chair, were all undoubtedly made right there, as was the wash tub and the bucket, made of staves bound together with hickory bark. There's another bucket made from a hollowed out log—both have deer hide handles, and there's a shoulder yoke so the housewife who went to the spring could sling a bucket from each end and carry two back. There is a wash board carved from a piece of curved hard maple wood, and many other tools for the women to work with—most important, of course, after the cooking utensils, was the tiny spinning wheel—which Mr. Donahey insists, could produce thread if put to the test!

And, over the door hangs a rifle, made of curly maple, in exact imitation of that owned by his own grandfather, which now hangs on the wall of his studio. There's a tiny bullet mold to go with it, beside the candle mold, both perfectly usable. He made the tiniest of candles in the candle mold!

Leaning against the wall is a frow. Now then—what's a frow? It is a broad bladed knife, and was used to splint shingles off from a block of cedar, or maybe chestnut in localities where there was no cedar—and this shingle making was generally done by the women folk in their spare time. Although when, with cooking, sewing, weaving, spinning, gardening and caring for babies, the pioneer women had any spare time, is a problem to us of today!

To many who study the contents of the cabin, the most amazing and amusing exhibit is that of the stored fruit, meat and vegetables hanging from the rafters; Tiny hams, sides of bacon, strings of dried pumpkin and apples and best of all, the bunches of dried corn, strung up by the turned back husks—anyone would swear those were real ears of corn! But Mr. Donahey made them, as he did everything, except those things that required sewing: The hooked rug by the bed was made by Mrs. Merie Mertz of Lima, Ohio; the bed spread was woven from an authentic 1800 pattern by the Berea School Industries, of Berea College in Kentucky, and a North Carolina woman who specializes in hand weaving provided the sun bonnet and apron, and made the little leather jacket that hangs on the wall, and the tiny moccasins on the floor, using doe skin which Mr. Donahey provided.

It's amusing to note the details carefully thought out. For instance, the floor is worn down a bit around the knot holes in the wood, and there are grease stains near the fireplace—the most careful of housewives could not have missed having some of those! Under the eaves is a hornet's nest. It seems pioneers encouraged hornets, because they ate up flies and mosquitoes!

Outside is the wood pile, with ax and saw near by, and there is an eaves trough, contrived of boards, sloping to a wooden tub, so that precious rain water could be caught and kept. There are even traces of moss, growing on the shingles and here and there on the logs, too.

Looking in at the room where a family could have lived with real comfort, one almost expects to see the tiny candlesticks lighten the infinitesimal knives and forks laid ready for a meal, steam coming from the iron pot. "And," says Mr. Donahey, "there is nothing there that could not be duplicated today. I could go into the woods with a very few primitive tools and build me a warm comfortable house with only what I found there. We think, we need all sorts of new fangled gadgets these days, but really we don't." When the little place was done, it sat for two or three years in Mr. Donahey's studio where it was visited by a stream of people. Teachers asked to bring their school classes, friends asked to bring their friends. But Mr. Donahey felt it should go to a Museum where many could enjoy it—and that it belonged in Ohio, of whose cabins it was a copy. Also his forebears on both sides were early Ohio settlers, as were Mrs. Donahey's mother's people, his brother Victor had been governor of the State three times and United States Senator from there once, and the other brother, J. H. of Cleveland had been for nearly fifty years the most widely known and beloved of cartoonists. So, the cabin was offered to the Ohio Historical Museum, and most enthusiastically accepted.

"Critique it? Offer suggestions for its improvement?" said Mr. Erwin Zepp, head of the Museum, "we can't! You know more about it than we do." So, in the spring of 1956, the Museum sent one of the members of its Board of Directors to Chicago, to see personally to the removal of the little cabin to its ultimate home.

Mr. Donahey went to Columbus, too, in order to see that it was set up to the best advantage, and there in that Museum, in the grounds of the Ohio State University, it now stands for all who are interested in the lives our ancestors lived, to see.

PLAYING CARDS

By FREIDA CLARK

White Pass and Yukon

To the playing card collector, the "White Pass and Yukon" immediately bring to mind the playing cards issued in 1889 and 1900 to commemorate the first passenger railroad in this territory which was opened February 20, 1899 to the Summit. The last spike in the completed road into the Yukon territory was at Caribou or Carcross, June 3, 1900.

The train to the Summit for passengers usually consisted of the engine, coal car and two passenger coaches. At the Summit a stop was made where they could step out to look "at the breathtaking scenery." Of course, there were tunnels and trestles that were engineering feats. When additional cars were added as was the case for freight, then the engines were "double headers" and two were connected to pull the load. The White Pass was under two flags, the Canadian and the United States, since it was the connection between Alaska and Yukon, which was Canadian territory. It was under supervision of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Few territories or subjects are so little known yet so rich in history as the White Pass and Yukon. When the Gold Rush started in 1898 it took weeks of hard travel and many died on the way. At one time, according to witnesses, there were so many dead horses on one part of the trail "they were used as stepping stones." There was cold, death, hunger and hardships, but still the flow of prospectors and adventurers continued.

When the news "Gold in the Klondike!" hit Seattle, word spread like wildfire and almost over night prospector-miners from California and the Rocky Mountain states, as well as doctors, lawyers, glamorous sirens and dance hall girls, gold-crazed sons of Broadway, barbers, butchers, gangsters, and just plain Johns and Marys turned toward Seattle as the starting place. Newspapers blazed headlines, "Gold! Gold! Gold!" Ads read "For Sale—Business cheap—going to the Klondike." Perhaps the "business" was a saloon, restaurant, or—it mattered not—quick cash was necessary to get to the Klondike.

Soon the newspapers were listing essential supplies needed such as, "Flour 500 pounds; sugar 100 pounds; bacon 200 pounds; beans 100 pounds; potatoes 200 pounds;" etc., for a total of 2000 pounds per man. Nothing was said about how these provisions were to be transported to the Klondike once they debarked, and many in their excitement and rush did not think, or either were not sufficiently practical, to plan ahead.

Seattle experienced its own prosperity at this time, since every hotel was filled with registers showing guests from every state in the Union.

On July 23, the "Portland," a regular steamship ferry between Seattle and Juneau, Alaska, could not begin to accommodate this deluge of traffic, taking only 125 passengers and 1000 tons of freight, mules and dogs included. The "Queen" took 250 passengers with freight the same day. These ships were followed by "City of Topeka," "Topeka," and the "City of Mexico." The "City of Seattle" was remodeled to accommodate three times her previous quota, the "Umatilla"; an excursion vessel arrived from Alaska with a load of miners and gold, only to unload and be ready to return in 24 hours with 400 passengers, their equipment, horses, etc. The

"Victoria" sailed, crowded to the limit, with passengers, horses and their supplies. The "Excelsior", another boat, rushed into service, departed on the 29th and it was estimated 10,000 persons jammed the dock eager for departure. A Chinese freighter was also pressed into service and fitted for passengers. It carried the largest list of any ship which ever went up the Alaskan Coast. It listed approximately 1000 persons, mules, horses and dogs.

The passage on the "Portland," the regular vessel which plied the route from Seattle to Juneau and other ports beyond was $200, but over night it jumped to $1,000.

The route was almost as land locked as a canal, and is considered one of the three such passages in the world, the others being the coast of Norway among the fjords and the coast of Chile, among the many small islands. The route was very scenic, if the Gold-Mad people were aware of their surroundings. As the route wound among the cliffs, through gorges that often had rock walls rising to be snow capped, other places where the sea would find a way through to dash against the rocks. And in contrast, there were grassy spots with beautiful flowers along the coast. Stops were made along the way, mostly at fishing or Indian villages, or settlements which had been early fur trading towns or villages. All of this was probably of little interest to those enroute to the Klondike gold territory.

Between Juneau and Skagway the travelers gazed, some perhaps were overawed, at the majestic glaciers rearing their heads into the sky. Sometimes huge chunks of ice would suddenly break away and fall with a thundering roar into the sea. Here at Skagway the ship passage ended and the gold-seekers suddenly found themselves left to face the hardships and terrors of this strange land for which they were so poorly equipped. Of course, many came here to make their fortune on those who did the mining. There were the saloons, the gambling dens and the dance hall girls, and of course, the confidence game sharks. Crime was inevitable and many a man was given drugged liquor and later robbed of his gold.

When the gold-seekers disembarked at Skagway they found a small mining town entirely unprepared for the sudden arrival of thousands of people, of which they had no warning and like Uncle Sam no plan with which to cope with them.

There was the narrow, deep gorge which followed the course of the Dyea River, which was generally about 50 feet wide, known as the Chilcoot Pass. This was a most treacherous route over ice shelves in winter and slippery shale in summer for several miles, with nothing on which to hold to prevent being blown off, as many were, in a strong wind or a sudden storm which came without warning. The snow was so white that snow blindness was not uncommon in the winter and fall season, if the traveler did not wear smoked glasses. Animals were almost useless through this Pass, as neither horses nor dogs could get footing.

The White Pass was only a short distance east of Skagway and was another tough trail, with a rise of 3,000 feet in 12 miles, to the summit. Those who had the price could have their supplies taken by pack-train to the top. Those who didn't made many trips to get their supplies transported. This was the most treacherous part of the trip, since it ran beside a deep gulch, called "Dead Horse Canyon." It is said that 3,000 pack horses lost their footing here and were dashed to death.

The next camp was fifteen miles distant, beyond the summit of White Pass. Both White Pass and the Chilcoot Pass trails merged at Lake Linderman, which lead by a small river to Lake Bennett, 30 miles long by which they could travel to Dawson and the gold fields by boat or raft which many made for themselves.

Boards were selling at 10 cents per foot, so it made the skiffs, rafts and other "sea going" vessels quite expensive. Some of the miners pooled their resources for a flat boat or scow large enough to carry their cargoes the 30 miles across Lake Bennett, and there were 800 boats in the first surge. The influx continued until approximately 7100 boats had crossed Lake Bennett to Dawson.

During the years 1885 to 1924 there was roughly 180 quarter-million dollars in fine gold taken out of the Klondike, in addition to much gold which was undoubtedly taken out without being reported.

The first road in the White Pass was a wagon road started by George A. Brackett of Minneapolis started in the fall of 1897, and nearly reached the Summit before the White Pass and Yukon Railway was organized. He finally sold out to the railroad company and they began immediately to convert it to a narrow gauge railroad. On May 27, 1898, men, horses and material were landed at Skagway and the laying of the steel rails started at once. On July 21, the first train was run for a distance of four miles, quite a historic event, since this was the first train to run in Alaska, which carried passengers. The railroad was completed to the summit on February 18, 1899, and the first passengers by train arrived there February 20, 1899.

The total length of the railroad is slightly more than 110 miles with 20 miles running through Alaska, 32 miles through British Columbia and 58 miles through the Yukon territory. The railroad ascends to 2,885 feet in the first 21 miles from Skagway which is at sea level. The highest elevation is reached at British Columbia which has an altitude of 2,916 feet. Most of the work between Skagway and the Summit was through solid rock. One cliff, 120 feet high, 70 feet deep, and 20 feet thick had to be completely demolished. At times the sheer walls were so steep and smooth that men had to be suspended by ropes to hold them while they worked. Some 35,000 men worked on this road. The average cost of the road from Skagway to the Summit, a distance of 21 miles was more than $100,000 per mile.

The cards issued to commemorate this event are rather limited in design it seems. The writer has only four designs as illustrated, but she believes there are others and reverse colors. All cards illustrated are souvenir types—that is with scenes of the time on the face of the card. Most are in sepia finish.

The less common design is the oval, which has a little scrolled vine above and below the oval, within the line circle (see upper left), and a slight variation in which are the small white letters above the oval, "Scenic Railway," and in the circle, below the oval, "Of the World." The background of this design is red (upper right card). The writer wonders if anyone has either of these with the oval in a blue background?

The center row across shows two of the Jokers, while the center card shows a tunnel and one of the trestles over 200 feet in height.

The most common design is that with the round design—either with the train passing over the inside of the round frame as the one illustrated at the lower left, which has a red background around the circle with name, or like the one lower right in which the train remains within the area within the band. The background of this one is blue (Note difference in borders).

The third row, center, is a map of the territory which is found in the complete decks.

have adroitly achieved its original mellow warmth and quiet dignity through a simple homelike setting appropriate to the native American vernacular.

Long rows of book filled walnut shelves line three sides of the rose-rust walls with king-size furniture in the center. High backed, carved walnut armchairs with rose-rust upholstery flank the fourteen foot reading table that rests on a huge Oriental rug of rich colors against a dark blue background. Two individual study corners have small, round tables and lamps.

"The Sage" himself dominates the scene. His lively amiability emanates from a life size painting at the far end of the room so he welcomes approaching visitors through the plate glass entrance door.

Oddly, this portrait reflects and glistens on the long table as if stressing its special significance. For, besides being the only known likeness painted in oils from life, the Russian artist, the late Nikol Schattenstein, succeeded where most photographers failed in capturing Mencken's vigorous, bouyant personality, and which he himself described as "full of steam and malicious animal magnetism!"

Mencken is depicted at the age of 47, during the height of his career. Seated with his head resting on his hand as if relaxing from his typewriter, he rarely wrote by hand. Mencken wears his typical working attire of nondescript trousers and white shirt with open collar and rolled sleeves. His usual bright red suspenders are replaced by dark blue ones with a red stripe, the gift of yesteryear's Hollywood screen idol, Rudolph Valentino.

The portrait contrasts colorfully against a dark blue sea of flanking bookshelves. Here, bound in handsome dark blue morocco is the core of the Collection: countless original Mencken manuscripts, notes, working drafts, galley proofs, letters, records and clippings.

Over one hundred scrapbooks house Mencken's prodigious outpourings published in newspapers and magazines. Other bulging scrapbooks contain thousands of press notices about "The Sage"—prompting him to remark about "the imbeciles who have printed acres of comment on my books."

Eight volumes entitled "The Hat-rack Case," present press comments on the highly controversial short story of that name by another author but published by Editor Mencken in the American Mercury.

Besides published copies of all Mencken's own books, the two remaining walls house his personal library and presentation copies of 20th century works. The avid research scholar's accumulation covers a far flung range in time and subject and includes "A Book About the Bible," "Seventeen Letters of Lord Byron," "A Grammar of English Grammars," "Indian Treaties Printed by Benjamin Franklin," and the works of Shakespeare, Shaw, Conrad and Nietzsche.

The 2,500 presentation copies are important in revealing the authors, many of whom were Mencken's close friends or admirers. Besides personal inscriptions, several contain very informal letters, especially from Sinclair Lewis, who dedicated "Elmer Gantry" to his beloved "Menck."

Autographed works by other Mencken friends include those of Carl Sandburg, James Branch Cabell, William Saroyan and Aldous Huxley along with 51 books by Theodore Dreiser and 34 by Joseph Hergesheimer. In his copy of "Geschichte Der Russen Revolution," Leon Trotsky wrote his inscription in French "because my English is very pitiful."

Mencken's intense love of music, good "vittles" and beer is recalled by a painted heraldic-like shield over the door, the insignia of the famous "Saturday Night Club." Mencken founded in 1905, and, where amateur musicians and gourmets played and supped weekly. Divided into sections by fat link sausages, the shield shows a musical instrument, a cooked lobster, a beer stein and a cluster of onions and pretzels.

On each side of the door are colored photographs of Mencken at the Club by photographer Jack Engeman. "The Sage" also looks from his last posed photograph, an unusually realistic portrayal made for his 75th birthday by the skilled camera artist, A. Aubrey Bodine of The Baltimore Sun.

From the corner behind the door comes the lively staccato of a typewriter. For fingers flutter fast over the keys in the tremendous task of cataloguing and indexing the entire Collection. Estimated to take two years, it is being done alone by the person who knows the Collection best, Mrs. Rosalind Redding Lohrfinck, Mencken's secretary for 25 years.

This gracious, gray-haired Baltimore widow is undaunted by prodigious literary work. Since 1930—beginning with "The Treatise of the Gods"—she took dictation of all Mencken's books and diary notes. She revealed that the diary, now compiled in five books, is to be added to the Collection.

Although Mrs. Lohrfinck succeeded her sister as "The Sage's" secretary, still she was surprised to find him very different from his vitriolic writings. "He was soft-spoken, always considerate of others and the personification of politeness," she explained.

The formal opening of the Room—to which Baltimoreans flocked and overflowed into the hall—was made by two Mencken friends, Hamilton Owens, retired editor-in-chief of The Baltimore Sunpapers (sic) and Alistair Cooke, British author, journalist and compiler of "The Vintage Mencken."

Mr. Cooke opened the Room "for the comfort of sinners and the astonishment of the virtuous." And to many of us who knew the "Thunderbolt" it seems he still has a thumb on the cradle built by the boy on the white marble steps with "Huckleberry Finn" in 1889.

To love and win is the best thing; to love and lose the next best.

The Periodical Writings of Thomas Hood

By RAYMOND J. WALKER

Thomas Hood, the comic poet, was originally destined for a business career. He was apprenticed to a mercantile house but at the age of fifteen his health failed. He went to Scotland to convalesce and remained there for two years. On his return to London he took up the art of engraving but also gave this up because of poor health. Yet what he did acquire of this art, with his genius for comic observation, must have been of excellent service to him in his subsequent career. This career at first was simply literary, in a subordinate connection with "The London Magazine."

Hood's connection with this periodical gave him opportunities which he did not neglect. He became acquainted with many of its contributors, among whom was Charles Lamb, who had a strong liking for the young sub-editor, who had in some ways a talent which resembled his own. Both were playful in manner, but melancholic by constitution, and in each there lurked an unsuspected sadness. The best humor is born of a broken heart. It is the old laugh clown laugh story. Although you feel like crying it gives true humor the life that makes it stand the test of time. Both had tenderness in their mirth, and mirth in their tenderness, and both were born punsters, with more meaning in their puns than met the ear, and constantly brought into surprising revelation the wonderful mysteries of words.

In addition to knowing Lamb, Hood came into contact with Cary, Thomas De Quincey, Allan Cunningham, Proctor, Talfourd, Hartley Coleridge, the peasant poet Clare, and other contributors to the magazine. His first work "Odes and Addresses" was written in cooperation with his brother-in-law J. H. Reynolds, the friend of Keats.

Hood was not long a subordinate. He became a master workman, and through ever varying gravities and gayeties, tears and laughter, grimaces, and whimsicalities, prose and verse, he labored incessantly, until his too early death. For a number of years he resided outside of England where he could live better for less money. Part of the time he resided in Coblenz in Rhenish Prussia and then at Ostend in Belgium. He came back to England in 1840.

For a few months he edited "The New Monthly" and then for a few months more a magazine of his own.

The whole of this latter period was filled with bodily and mental trials of which it is painful to read. Yet it was during this period that he wrote some of his finest things, both laughable and serious. He died in 1845 at the age of 47.

A study of the works of Hood shows us that he was not a mere punster or jester, not just a master of grimace or maker of broad grins, not an eccentric oddity in prose and verse, nor a merry-andrew who tickled to senseless laughter, nor a spasmodic melodramatist who writhes in fictitious pun, but a sincere, truthful and gifted nature—many-sided, many-colored, harmonious as a whole, and having a real unity as the center of its power.

No writer has ever been so successful as Hood in combining the grotesque with the terrible. He had the art of sustaining the illusion of an awful and solemn narrative through a long poem, to be closed in a catastrophe that was at once unexpected and ludicrous. The mystification is complete; the secret of the issue is never betrayed; suspense is retained with Spartan reticence; curiosity is excited progressively to its utmost tension; and the surprise at the end is oftentimes electric. "A Storm at Hastings" and "The Demon Ship" are of this class. But sometimes the terrible so prevails as to overpower the ludicrous, or rather, it becomes more terrible by the very presence of the ludicrous. We have evidence of this in the poem called "The Last Man."

The crowning quality of Hood's genius was the simply pathetic. Pathos was the product of his mind when it was most matured by experience, and when suffering, without impairing its strength, had refined its characteristic benevolence to the utmost tenderness. Hood's pathos culminates in "The Song of the Shirt," "The Lay of the Laborer" and "The Bridge of Sighs." These are marvelous lyrics. In spirit and form they are singular and remarkable and show the mystic enchantment of genius.

As in the case of Samuel Johnson, who had a great biographer in Boswell, the writer who attempts the life of Hood finds it already well done in his "Literary Reminiscences," published in "Hood's Own." It is a dangerous thing to attempt to take the pencil out of his hand.

Thomas Hood was born in London on May 23, 1799. His father was a publisher and member of the firm of Vernon & Hood. In addition to being sub-editor of "The London Magazine" and editor of "The New Monthly," he was a contributor to "Punch" and edited "The Gem" and edited his own monthly magazine "Hood's Comic Miscellany." He published a "Comic Annual" from 1830 to 1832. Of this a writer in the "London Post" wrote: "Hood's Comic Annual contains more wit, more fun and humor, than any work that has been published in many a long day."

Hood treated current events in a fine spirit of caricature, entirely free from grossness and vulgarity; without a trait of personal malice, and with an undercurrent of true sympathy and honest purpose that gives these papers, like the sketches of Hogarth, a permanent value. As a punster he at times was annoying but he defended himself in the couplet:

*However critics may take offence
A double meaning has double sense.*

Some of the articles in the "Comic Annuals" were subsequently reproduced and published with new matter as "Hood's Own Complete," 1839. In "Whimsicalities, a Periodical Gathering," 1844, many articles originally published in the "New Monthly Magazine" are used. "Hood's Comic Album in Prose and Verse" was published in 1844.

"The Dream of Eugene Aram," a graphic poem, perhaps next to "The Song of the Shirt," the most popular of Hood's productions—originally appeared in "The Gem" for 1829. "The Song of the Shirt" appeared anonymously in the Christmas number of "Punch" for 1843.

Hood was also associated with "The Athenaeum" started in 1823 by J. Silk Buckingham and he was a regular contributor for the rest of his life.

"At the Sign of the Crest"

Thomas-Coat-of-Arms

By HAZEL KRAFT EILERS

He beareth for Arms: Argent a chevron lozengy or and sable between three ravens close of the last. Crest—On a branch of a tree fessways (at the dexter end some sprigs vert) a raven, wings expanded sable.

The above description of the THOMAS Armorial Bearing is registered in Burke's General Armory and is confirmed in Fairbairn's Book of Crests for a family residing in London. It is also found in America Heraldica (page 112, plate 14) and in MacKenzie's Colonial Families, volume 5, page 519 ascribed to Philip Thomas (1600-1674). It is similar to some granted to other Thomas families, and the basic Coat-of-Arms with the chevron plain instead of lozengy, and no crest, was granted in the time of Henry VIII.

Translated into non-Heraldic terms: A silver (argent) shield on which is charged a chevron having lines crossing in diamond shape pattern (lozengy), the colors alternating gold and black (or and sable). The chevron lies between the black ("of the last" color named—or sable) ravens with wings "close" to the body. The crest is a black (sable) raven with wings expanded standing on a branch of a tree lying flat (fessways) and having green (vert) sprigs at the right (dexter) end of the branch (the viewer's left). A lozenge, or diamond shaped figure, is symbolic of constancy, verity, probity and equity. Lozengy has the same meaning. The raven represents one of an enduring constancy of nature. From remote ages and among many races a sentiment of veneration and superstition has attached to the raven. It is the emblem of constancy and has been appropriated to "him, who inheriting little from his own ancestors has through Providence been the architect of his own fortune" in token of its being deserted by its parents from the moment of being hatched. "Between three" ravens, means two and one in heraldry—that is, two above and one below, the charge.

Colors are representative of the personal characteristics of the original bearer, and are granted only if he be worthy. Silver (indicated in the engraving by plain white space) signifies sincerity and peace; gold (indicated by the white space powdered with small dots), generosity and elevation of mind; black or sable (indicated by vertical and horizontal parallel lines crossing one another), the fur lining of royal robes, constancy and nobility. Vert (green) is indicated by oblique parallel drawn lines leaning from the vertical to dexter (right) side of the shield. This has no special meaning as it is the natural color of the leaves.

A Coat-of-Arms is not considered complete without being decorated with the mantling and helmet, which the men wore in medieval times. These mantlings must have the main color of the Coat-of-Arms on the outside and the main metal for the lining.

Many are the Thomas emigrants to America — understandable when we note that the name of Thomas ranks seventh in the sixty most common of Welsh and English names. Bolton's American Armory (1927) lists five Thomas armorial bearings, including the one illustrated here, in use in America by the descendants of various Thomas progenitors. Munsell's Index to American Genealogies (1900) proves the wealth of material to be found, as it indicates genealogies have been compiled on the Thomas family of Maine; of Boston; several of Maryland; of Hilltown, Pa.; of Ohio; of Hardwick, Mass. of Braintree; and of Pennsylvania—plus sixty-two other sources. Add to this the accumulation of material printed in the last fifty years and you will have an idea of the scope open to research. Newberry Library, Chicago, has twenty-three Thomas references in its card file.

Lawrence Buckley Thomas spent over twenty years in research on the family, publishing his first work in 1877, The Thomas Family of Mary- land; and another in 1896, The Thomas Book, giving the genealogies of Sir Rhys ap Thomas, K. G., the Thomas family descended from him, and allied families. These genealogies cover the ancestry and descendants of Philip Thomas born about 1600, son of Evan Thomas of Swansea, Glamorganshire, Wales. He emigrated from Bristol, England, in 1651, and settled in West River, Md. He served as a Lieutenant of the Provincial Forces in 1654, was one of the Six High Commissioners of the Provincial Court, and in 1658-9 was one of those who surrendered the Government to Lord Baltimore. His will was made September 9, 1674 and probated 7/10/1675. His wife, Sarah Harrison, died early in 1687. She and their only surviving son, Samuel, were ministers of the Society of Friends.

The arms emblazoned here were borne on the gold headed cane of Philip Thomas and also on a service of silver. A footnote (p. 27 The Thomas Book 1896) states the "silver has disappeared. It is reported to have been exchanged at a silversmiths in Baltimore for plated ware of a newer pattern and been melted by the purchaser."

Evan and Jane Thomas of Wales, came to Boston in 1640 with four children. Jane died in 1658 and Evan died in 1661. They are claimed as the emigrant ancestors of Isaah Thomas (1749-1831) of Worcester, "by whose gift the first library building of the American Antiquarian Society was erected, and by whose foresight the books, then placed in it, were gathered together and by whose interest and active exertions the Society itself had been originated," in 1812. (American Antiquarian Society, Vol. 30, p. 251). He was well known as a printer, patriot, editor, author and philanthropist. Although some sources indicate uncertainty concerning his descent from Evan and Jane Thomas, I note in Bolton's American Armory he used a bookplate emblazoned with the following Arms:

"Argent on a cross sable five crescents of the field." If anything more is known concerning the ancestry of Evan and Jane, other than that they came "from Wales," I did not locate it.

"Argent three lions rampant gules, a chief azure," is ascribed to Thomas Thomas of St. Mary's County, Maryland, understood to have come from County Sussex, England, the latter part of 1639. This statement is found in MacKenzie's Colonial Families. As "the Thomas family supposedly originated in Wales" and "Thomas Thomas as is understood to have come from County Sussex, England," I do not know the basis for the assumption of the Arms. The Thomas progenitors of the different branches of the family were so numerous, it would be well to make a careful check before assuming any particular Thomas Armorial Bearing.

Another Thomas Thomas kept a diary, and from his pen we have the following: "We left Liverpool September 9, 1818 having paid £36 for our passage and £38 for provisions of which I took more than proved necessary. . . . after seven weeks sailing, sometimes pleasant and sometimes very rough, we landed in Baltimore, Maryland 10/26/1818. . . . I brought over 300 pounds of weight of pins and needles for which I was obliged to pay a duty of $25. . . . Hired a Pennsylvania wagon to carry my family and goods to Pittsburgh for $180.00. The journey over the mountains was most difficult and arduous, though we were favored with very pleasant weather most of the way. Great improvements have been made in the roads the last few years, and in two years more, there will be a turnpike all the way from Baltimore to Pittsburgh. . . . Spent two weeks at Pittsburgh and then on down the Ohio River to Cincinnati."

This struck a cord with me as last week we traveled on the Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana turnpike, a thrilling first experience. To accentuate this, today's Chicago Tribune, September 9th, describes a trip taken by Hal Foust, the first to drive "an all-expressway route from a point a few miles east of Chicago to Manhattan, 814.2 miles," the elapsed time on the road being 15 hours and 20 minutes. The turnpike of 1820 and the Turnpike of 1956 would have no similarity, but probably were equally thrilling to their own times.

To mention all the early Thomas settlers would run to great length, for they settled early in every section open at the time. The Descendants of William Thomas of Hardwick, Mass. (1891) compiled by A.

R. Thomas mentions many of these emigrants, and then gives up, stating, "others of this name must have migrated to New England about this time, as from Savage's Genealogical Dictionary and other sources records of some thirty different families have been collected who lived in New England previous to 1692."
